This is not a presidential record. This is used as an administrative marker by the William J. Clinton Presidential Library Staff.

Documents from this Mandatory Declassification Review were released in full or released in part.

Those documents released with redactions have been restricted under Sections 1.4 (b) and (d) of E.O. 13526.
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with Labour Party Leader and Prime Minister-elect Tony Blair

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Mr. Blair

Notetakers: Natalie Johnson, Marc Koehler and Marianna Papadimitriou

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 1, 1997, 11:25-11:27 p.m. EDT
Residence

The President: Hello?

Mr. Blair: Hello.

The President: Tony? Congratulations.

Mr. Blair: Thanks very much indeed.

The President: What are you doing, making a round of parties?

Mr. Blair: Yes we are just off. There's a big celebration by the banks of the Thames. I'm just heading off there now. We're slowing down through the night. It's a stunning result, really.

The President: That was amazing.

Mr. Blair: Yes, it's amazing, isn't it?

The President: I'm really happy for you.

Mr. Blair: Yes, well you showed the way.

The President: I'm sorry you got so much grief from the press.

Mr. Blair: That's right. Always the Right attack you and the Left don't defend you.
The President: Well, the people voted for you. That's the main thing. I wish you well and look forward to working with you. I guess I'll see you soon, at that NATO meeting, if not sooner.

Mr. Blair: Yes, that's right. I would love to do that. We have a chance to do something now. I look forward to meeting with you. We have a good and strong relationship.

The President: See you soon. Go on back to your people now. I just wanted to wish you congratulations.

Mr. Blair: Thanks, thank you very much indeed.

The President: Good-bye.

Mr. Blair: Good-bye.

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Private Meeting with Prime Minister Blair and British Cabinet (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
William Daley, Secretary of Commerce
William Crowe, Ambassador to the UK
Samuel Berger, Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs
James Steinberg, Deputy Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs
Mary Ann Peters, Director for European Affairs, NSC (Notetaker)

Prime Minister Blair
John Holmes, Private Secretary to the Prime Minister for Overseas Affairs
Members of the British Cabinet

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 29, 1997, 11:40 a.m. - 12 noon
The Cabinet Room, No. 10 Downing Street

Prime Minister Blair: (Following introductions of Cabinet members) Parliament is in recess; we are having a hell of a time getting underway -- the honeymoon doesn't last long. The second term is what we need; to take nothing for granted and not rely on the other side's unpopularity.

The President: I am delighted to be here. I admire what you did for the party; it is important to have the freedom to capture the center and move into tomorrow.

Prime Minister Blair: The truth is we took part of what we did from you; I am happy that these issues are on the agenda in the rest of Europe now.

The President: There are some leaders like the prime ministers of the Netherlands and Portugal who have the same ideas.

Prime Minister Blair: And Sweden -- it is helpful to look at other examples.
The President: Kok was talking about France; they are not ready yet to do what is needed. The UK, the Netherlands and the United States have good social compacts that make the country work; in the United States we need to maintain competitiveness while looking out for people. Millions can’t cope with work and family; and these are the people who face education and safe streets and health care challenges. If you succeed, and I think you will, constructive change will have to take place. France and Germany need to balance social programs and global realities; a different version of that problem faces us all.

Prime Minister Blair: That is why it is so important to exchange ideas; we have learned from the best and worst of experiences; there must be structural change. It could well be premature to introduce the euro without it.

The President: It is interesting how a currency acquires a life of its own -- it has become the litmus test for France and Germany, though the underlying changes have not taken place.

(Cabinet meeting adjourned, discussion continued with Chancellor of Exchequer Brown.)

Mr. Brown: There is a need for a flexible labor market, which you faced up to in the United States. You have 50 percent more consumption per head than France and Germany because they have not liberalized shopping hours, and 50 percent more computer work. If possible, we should make the G-7 the forum for discussion of flexible labor forces so others can learn from the U.S. experience. The debate needs to go forward in Europe.

Prime Minister Blair: It doesn’t mean giving up the social compact but it is a new world. The role of government is not about hostilities with business but to equip people with the skills and technology they need and help families.

The President: I agree with that.

Mr. Brown: In Great Britain, the long-term unemployed make up 40 percent of our unemployed, compared with 10 percent in the United States. We have no way to get them back to work. There will have to be huge changes; France is the best example because their public sector is huge. We need to demonstrate that growth and social programs can work together -- you do not have to sacrifice one for the other.

Prime Minister Blair: I told Jospin that he was attacking the right for the wrong reasons -- he should be doing it because they are not going far enough.
The President: We cut government employment by 300,000. It is now the smallest since the Kennedy Administration and, on a per capita basis, the smallest it has been since 1933. We have direct transfers to social security and to state and local governments. You could be helpful with the difficulties within France and Germany with regard to social spending. At least in Germany they spend the money better, on long-term training; in France people are paid to stay unemployed for very long periods.

Mr. Brown: The system can only work if there is mobility, flexibility and large transfers. Right now, none of these three exists.

The President: There is one thing to look at. I know the United States are different than EU member nations, but you would be interested in how far big states can go in having different financial policies. New Jersey is an example -- it proved you can raise the minimum wage and create more low-wage jobs. I used this experience to justify our raising the minimum wage. But unemployment will go up if the rise is too big. Your unemployment rate is lower than other Europeans' because of your flexible system.

Mr. Brown: Since they are not required to work, no long-term unemployed single parents are included in our statistics. That means unemployment is really closer to 20 percent in some cases. We have the biggest single-parent population in Europe.

The President: If the culture says it is no longer necessary to have a marriage to have children, then that means single parents should have to work.

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Restricted Meeting with British Prime Minister Tony Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
William Crowe, Ambassador to the UK
Samuel R. Berger, Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs
Mary Ann Peters, Director for European Affairs, National Security Council
(Notetaker)

Anthony Blair, Prime Minister
Sir John Kerr, Ambassador to the U.S.
John Holmes, Private Secretary to the Prime Minister
Jonathan Powell, Chief of Staff to the Prime Minister

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 29, 1997, 12:00-12:30 p.m.
No. 10 Downing Street, London

Prime Minister Blair: Should we work through our cards? (U)

The President: If you see me with all the cards they give me, you know it is going to be a long meeting because I have not done my homework. If I do it, I reduce it to this one card. (U)

With regard to Northern Ireland, I would like to tell you that when it comes time that you think it would be helpful for us to say something about a cease-fire or decommissioning, let me know. We may have to wait for the Irish election. I have some pull and can call in chits; just let me know. (J)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Reason: 1.5(b)
Declassify On: 6/05/07
The President: I will think about the parade problem. The conflict reminds me of the Middle East. Do you have a resolution in mind?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: One problem is that the people are farther along than the leaders. For people like Sinn Fein and Ian Paisley, the conflict is their whole life.

Ambassador Crowe: At Drumcree, however, all those peace-loving people went indoors and shut their blinds. (U)

The President: Those were the same people in the streets cheering us -- they need leadership.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Some of my rich yuppie friends cancelled trips to Belfast to play golf. (U)

Ambassador Crowe: The President has been strongly supportive of investment in Northern Ireland. (U)
The President: You need a place for the politicians to go to be relevant. They have to have a life and an identity other than their ability to stop the process.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

You’ve got it right with a guarantee of some connection to Ireland. I have listened to them talk and I think that if there were no political leaders, we could get the people to agree.

Mr. Holmes:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Sinn Fein needs to be on board with the substance of the resolution, whatever the details of the relationship to Ireland. What is the role for the DUP and Paisley? If we leave the extremes out, they can undermine the solution. I was struck by that when I met Paisley. I didn’t get a word in edgewise for 20 minutes, but I didn’t care.

Mr. Holmes:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: You mean if you give them a meaningful devolved government?

Mr. Berger: We are maintaining contact with the unionists -- I called Trimble recently.

The President: He is impressive.

Ambassador Crowe: But not at Drumcree. And the SDLP needs Sinn Fein in the talks so they cannot criticize the compromises Hume makes. (S)

The President: You know where we are. If there is anything I can do, let me know at the right time.

Mr. Berger: Mo Mowlam was over last week and we had a great meeting.

The President: She is good, great on TV. Her happy face inspires confidence. She seems solid and not full of herself; you don’t need another person over there posturing like a peacock.

Prime Minister Blair: I will tell her that.

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Luncheon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
William Crowe, Ambassador to the UK
Samuel R. Berger, Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs
John Podesta, Deputy Chief of Staff
Daniel Tarullo, Head of the National Economic Council
James Steinberg, Deputy Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs
E. Anthony Wayne, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European and Canadian Affairs
Mary Ann Peters, Director for European Affairs, National Security Council (Notetaker)

Prime Minister Blair
Sir John Kerr, Ambassador to the U.S.
Alistair Darling, Chief Secretary, Treasury
Colin Budd, Cabinet Office
Alex Allan, Principal Private Secretary to the Prime Minister
Jonathan Powell, Chief of Staff
Philip Barton, Assistant Private Secretary for the Prime Minister
John Holmes, Private Secretary for Overseas Affairs

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 29, 1997, 12:30-3 p.m.
No. 10 Downing Street, London

The President: We should talk about NATO. I have the impression that most leaders in Paris are in favor of a group of five, adding Romania and Slovenia to the other three. We have reservations about that.
Our first concern is that the first shall not be the last -- we have said that all along. That is why we need aggressively to build on PFP for future members. If there are five, no one will believe in a second round and we will be under greater pressure to reassure them publicly. This could lead Russia to think that we are committed to Baltic membership. We don't want any grey zones, but the open door must be credible. That may not be as satisfying, but it may be the proper thing to do.

Prime Minister Blair:

Mr. Berger: They're shifting because of Slovenia and because they are grateful for Romania's deal with Hungary.

The President: I see Kohl next week; he should know where you are on this.

Prime Minister Blair:

Mr. Berger: We need to be reassuring and embracing in our language; perhaps not using the example of waiting room.

Prime Minister Blair:

Mr. Berger: One way is to emphasize self-selection.

The President: We are working on it and thinking of the package we can put forward. Bill just whispered, "Are Romania and Slovenia ready? This is a military alliance."

Ambassador Crowe: You need to make the judgment in the military context.

The President: We have a disagreement with our partners on the continent but I am sure a larger group would turn up the heat on the Baltic issue and we are not prepared to handle that yet. This is a problem that needs time to sort itself out; we need to give it a few years. If you give it away now, you have nothing to fill the time.
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What argument did they make? (c)

Mr. Holmes: That they are not ready. (c)

Ambassador Kerr:

The President: I would have thought that, but the republican caucus actually favors letting in more countries. I don't want to misrepresent the Hill; I think the republicans will follow their leadership on this. Some are against enlargement because of the fear of provoking a nationalist response in Russia -- that is a silly argument. (c)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. (c)

Mr. Berger: New polling data shows that NATO is just not a grass-roots issue in Russia. (c)

Prime Minister Blair: What a surprise -- they are just being normal and caring more about the economy. (c)

The President: What do you think about the Iranian election? (c)

Ambassador Kerr:

Mr. Budd:

The President: That is where we are. We hope things will get better. It concerns me that we are getting to the point that there are no Western-educated politicians in the government. (c)

Prime Minister Blair:

CONFIDENTIAL
The President: We have made an attempt to address this within NATO -- the European Security and Defense Identity. Except for AFSOUTH we are happy with that. And we are trying to work out AFSOUTH.

On the Middle East, Saddam has literally violated the no-fly zone. We would be stupid to take action against those flights that 99 percent of the world think are okay. But the UN resolutions are at stake; we have to do something about his challenge of the no-fly zone. Our idea is that he can have as many humanitarian flights as he wants but we need to have advance notice. The only problem is that if you tell him that and he does not comply, you have to respond. That puts a burden on us. But if we believe in the UN resolutions, it is the best we can do.

Ambassador Crowe: Shoot them down?

The President: No. We want to avoid deaths and especially deaths of civilians. I don't want to comment because we have not defined it yet. We will get credit with world opinion for permitting humanitarian flights and it is reasonable to demand notification.

Prime Minister Blair:

Ambassador Kerr:

Mr. Berger: There has been a refinement in our thinking. A conversation between our two militaries produced a range of options.

The President: This is not a question of how to win, but how to avoid a loss. There is no way to win with world public opinion but we are not prepared to let Saddam walk away from the resolutions. We are not looking for a victory; this is not like our response to the attempt on President Bush's life. There is a sanctions committee in the UN but we don't trust them. We don't want him to think he can sucker punch us into shooting down innocent civilians.

CONFIDENTIAL
Mr. Holmes:

Prime Minister Blair:

Mr. Budd:

Prime Minister Blair:

Mr. Berger: If he knocks and a door opens, he will knock again next time. {C}

The President: Whatever we do, even if it is less, we must do it together. {C}

Ambassador Crowe: I wonder what his lawyers are telling him? {C}

The President: I concur with your analysis on Iran. It is imperative we stay together. I want to discuss it on its merits, not in terms of money. Others are saying that all is well as long as they don't blow up our people, and we can all make money. But we have a larger responsibility. You know about terrorism because of the IRA. {C}

Prime Minister Blair: I agree. We need to hold firm. {C}

The President: In terms of yesterday's NATO conference, there is less than meets the eye. I think what we are really doing is reorganizing ourselves to face the new challenges, getting rid of the intellectual clutter to free ourselves for the future. If you believe we need to combat proliferation, ethnic hatred and terrorism and that we need a common policy on the environment, then we have to be organized to deal with these transnational problems. The world looks to us to be honest about these problems; we may not always be right but we have to be honest. The pressure to go for the commercial benefits is enormous. {C}

Prime Minister Blair: Can we discuss China and Hong Kong? {C}

The President: We are with you on that. {C}

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Under the terms of the 1984 agreement, the UK and China made a deal that you asked us to endorse.

Have you heard about this movie that is to released on July 1? It is the story of how the British got Hong Kong; you do not come off well. They are doing what we did in Germany after the war, in reverse. That won’t make much difference since Hong Kong is one of the most open places in the world, but it is a metaphor for how they are going to play it.

We want to be helpful.

We have more leverage with Russia because of IFI programs and denuclearization funding. We have some leverage with China through the WTO, but Hong Kong is unique and we will support you.

Prime Minister Blair:

Mr. Berger: It would be useful to come up with agreed benchmarks such as early elections under fair conditions, civil liberties. If we are all sending the same message, it will be more effective. We are not there yet.

Mr. Steinberg: It depends what that means.

Mr. Holmes:
The President: We will be doing our best to stick with you—you have a big dog in this hunt.

Ambassador Crowe: That is an Arkansas expression. (U)

The President: They hunt with dogs here too. I went beagling once. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: So our officials will be sitting in front of the Red Army.

Mr. Holmes: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: We don't want to put them in a box publicly, but privately we can try to persuade them.

Mr. Berger: There will be 25,000 reporters there. The danger is that you set the bar too high with a press that wants a confrontation, as do some people in Hong Kong. If our benchmarks are not clear, we could be drawn into a confrontation.

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: The press tried to get me to comment yesterday. I ducked the question because it is not our business. I know Kohl and Chirac are for it. [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)]
But it would be good to understand what the consequences and alternatives are. It is usually discussed at the theological level rather than in practical terms. That is what I would want to know.

Prime Minister Blair:

Mr. Tarullo: It is difficult for us to say anything because they think we are concerned about the euro displacing the dollar as a reserve currency.

The President: If it leads to lower growth, it will not be good for us or the rest of the world. At Denver we are going to talk about an Africa initiative; but if we, you and Japan don’t have economic growth, we cannot help Latin America or Africa. Your position is principled; the Tories’ is ideological. Yours is the best way to go forward since the theological arguments are hard to understand.

Mr. Alan: What is lacking is a strategy for job creation and structural adjustment.

The President: Our labor ministers held a conference in Detroit, but it didn’t accomplish much because of economic conditions. Delors put out a white paper at the time but nothing happened. I think we should acknowledge we tried it a few years ago; it is a great idea.

I’d like you to come to Washington soon on an official visit.

Prime Minister Blair: I’d like to as long as I can visit New York.

The President: You can. You know I am giving the commencement speech at Chelsea’s school. Dan Tarullo’s daughter goes there too; Chelsea says she is frightenningly smart but still nice. Seniors finish a month early so they can do a special project. Chelsea is going to be a doctor so she is at Georgetown Hospital with a surgeon. She watched a heart valve implant operation and said it was too interesting to be queasy about the sight of blood.

Dan, what is your daughter’s project? (U)

Mr. Tarullo: She is teaching English, but I think she is going to be a psychologist. (U)
Ambassador Kerr: It is amazing the extent to which his daughter has a private life. (U)

The President: The press has been wonderful in honoring the request Hillary and I made to them, with one or two exceptions. Children deserve a chance to grow up in private. I think the press respected this because we did not put Chelsea in the political spotlight. (U)

We will see each other in Denver. We are staying at an old cowboy hotel. Do you know where you are staying? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I am not sure. (U)

The President: We are arranging a dinner at a place called The Fort that specializes in buffalo meat, which is low fat. When I had lunch with Boris, he served roast pig and told me real men hack off the ears and eat them. And once he served 24 courses, including moose lips. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It is time to get ready for the press conference. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with Britsh Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: John Smith, Tony Campanile,
Lyle Harrison, Marc Koehler, Marianna
Papadimitriou and Mary Ann Peters

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: June 10, 1997, 1458-1517
The Oval Office

The President: Hello? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Hello. (U)
The President: Tony? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Bill? How are you? (U)
The President: Fine. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Thanks very much indeed, Bill, for coming through. I just want a quick word with you.

The President: What can I do to help? (U)
Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: I'll be happy to do that. We'll contact them immediately.

Prime Minister Blair: That's great

The President: This is crazy. I don't know why they're doing this now, when you're trying to put all this together.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, I agree with that. We'll get in touch with them today and convey this in the strongest possible terms. If they are thinking about proceeding like this while you are working in good faith, it makes no sense, it's crazy.

Prime Minister Blair: That's what I think.

The President: I've got it and I'll get on it. How are you doing otherwise?

Prime Minister Blair: Fine. There are pretty turbulent waters here about European monetary union, with Jospin's victory.

The President: It might give you a little more room, though.

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, maybe it will give me more room.
The President: I thought the Economist this week had some interesting suggestions on how to proceed with the currency but change some of the Maastricht requirements. They argue that France cannot make it anyway with 12 percent unemployment, but they acknowledge that the Bundesbank would not agree to such changes.

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely right, and if you’re doing it while keeping the franc high, you’re really squeezing the economy.

The President: It’s just pretty hard to ask a Socialist government -- it was hard to ask Chirac’s government -- to do nothing except cut spending when you have 13 percent unemployment.

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely right, and if you’re doing it while keeping the franc high, you’re really squeezing the economy.

The President: Well, I don’t believe they can solve their economic and unemployment problems through the budget anyway. They need structural reform. Maybe Socialist governments can actually do this better than Conservative governments.
The President: Is he coming to Denver or not? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: He must be? (U)

The President: Well the way their constitution works, Chirac has foreign policy and he has economic policy, so they normally both come. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Well, I suppose he will, won't he? It should be interesting. Have you met him?

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: "You guys have to help me." Tell me who was there? (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Well I'm looking forward to it. I'm glad to see the debate being carried on our side of the field, but there could be a huge backlash if the left fails to deliver. Ultimately, in a democracy the poor rely upon the social judgment of the middle class. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely right. There's a real risk that we will fail.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That nearly happened to us, you know, when the Congress in '94 didn't pass my plan. I fended it off and we now have agreement in the budget to repair it. I think we saved it, but you don't want to miss those chances when they come along.
Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely right, there's a huge mood of uncertainty in Europe at the moment. It's almost impossible to overstate it. (U)

The President: Well, they keep trying to draw me into discussions on details and I keep trying to stay out of it. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I think where you could have an impact is that people look across the Atlantic, they see the American economy and see that it works. (U)

The President: What I try to do is to avoid getting drawn into discussions of issues such as: "If the European currency is delayed, does that mean it is dead." What I need to do is stay on my general theme that you can't create jobs without reform, but you don't have to cut out the social safety net. That is what your election showed. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: The Economist? (U)

The President: Not in this edition, but in the last one. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I will look for it. We've got to provide people with a way through this problem, so it's not a choice between dismantlement and corporatism. This is a very European problem, born out of the ideological clash between socialism and capitalism. You do not have it in the same way in the United States. (U)
The President: The problem here is that because union membership is declining, even if you have more jobs, people worry that their families are vulnerable, especially because there is no universal health care. But without growth and lower unemployment it’s hard to get these things done. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, that’s right. You could have a more universal system of health care in your country without wrecking the system. (U)

The President: Of course we could. We’d save money. But we’re going to take another pop at it this time, at least for the children. Anyway, I can’t wait to see you in Denver and I’ll call the appropriate people and send the message publicly and privately. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: That would be very kind, Bill; it would really help. It will be great to see you in Denver. (U)

The President: Have you talked Bertie Ahern? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. (U)

The President: Do you think he’ll be Okay? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I like him.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

We have to have a unified position or it doesn’t mean a thing. So I’ll stick with you as far as I can and see you in Denver. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: OK, Bill, many, many thanks indeed. (U)

The President: Once again, give my best to your wife. We had a great time, and let’s follow up on that project about philosophy. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, we are; it was great to see you and Hillary. One of my few moments of real enjoyment. (U)

The President: Well, you get to be a real person. See you in Denver. Bye-bye. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: See you in Denver. Bye-by. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
                Prime Minister Tony Blair
                Notetakers: Doug Mueller, Wylma Robinson, Pat O'Shaughnessy, Bonnie Glick

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: July 27, 1997, 12:41 - 1:02 p.m. EDT
Private Residence, Los Angeles, California

The President: Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. How are you? (U)

The President: Very well, indeed. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I am sitting here outside Chequers having a cup of tea with a friend of yours, Steven Spielberg. (U)

The President: Steven Spielberg? You are? You tell Mr. Spielberg that you may be drinking tea with him, but I am here on the beach in Santa Monica having coffee with Ron Burkle, which shows California has more influence than either the British or the U.S. Government. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: You are? (U)

The President: Yes. I am looking at people skateboarding at the beautiful beaches of Santa Monica. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: You lucky man. This is your vacation, then? (U)
The President: No, no. I am out here working, but it is a Sunday morning and you wanted to talk. And Ron Burkle is a friend of mine who bought a house very close to the hotel where I was last night. I interrupted coffee to speak with you. Congratulations again on the ceasefire. I think we have a chance now. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, we have a chance now. I just wanted to fill you in on that.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Is there anything we can do to help you with Trimble? Probably not. Yet

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: You know that is a well I can only go back to one more time. I am certainly willing to try to do that though. Yet

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I could try to come on over to see you or something. Yet
Prime Minister Blair: What I think, the reason why I think there is some hope in the situation is that the ordinary people in Northern Ireland are desperate for peace.

The President: Oh God yes. This is the place in the world where there is the largest disconnect between the leaders and what the ordinary people want.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: And we will do that. I got your letter on the Middle East and I basically agree with the letter.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

And I am really glad you are going to become EU president in January because my sense is that we can get some grudging progress for the rest of the year, and if there is going to be a breakthrough, then we will need everyone’s help to close next year. I don't think the present situation can be maintained.

Prime Minister Blair: That's right.

The President: Well, first of all, a flashpoint or meltdown point.

Prime Minister Blair: Let's give you an example, here you are trying to do this in Northern Ireland and one day the IRA has the whole thing in its power and the next day, Paisley does.
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

That may be something you could have the Europeans examine -- because it is very important -- whether you want to provide economic assistance to Jordan. With parliamentary elections coming, we would be in a tough situation without any real power if the people he is backing, who have stable relations with Israel, lose ground because of economic difficulties.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: One of the things that would help is to raise the economic fortune of the Palestinians.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: Hello? You are getting a bit faint there. (U)

The President: I know that you can't come to us on September 9 because of the Scottish devolution and 13-15 doesn't work for me, but we need to set up some time. We will keep working till we find the time. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: September is really difficult? (U)

The President: Just those two days for me. I think I can work out another time. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I think it probably is a bit difficult for me because if something starts to go wrong. (U)

The President: How are the English reacting? Is it going down pretty well? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It is okay for the minute.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Are most of the Scots in the Westminster parliament in your party? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We are going to give up a few seats. (U)

The President: You may have some to spare now, but you can never tell what you'll need in five years. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: However, it has not always been like this in Scotland. In the 50's it was mostly Tory. What I am trying to do is build new bases of support, one of the most difficult things to do. There are two referendums, one in Scotland and one in Wales. (U)

The President: So you stay there and handle it. Your preference is to get the visit done in the month of September. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I think so. (U)

The President: That is my strong preference. I will talk to my people and we'll get it done. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Let us do that, Bill, and I also had a note from Hillary about the other thing we talked about and we will work on that. You have a good time in Santa Monica. (U)
The President: Tell Steven Spielberg I hate coming all the way out here and not get to see him because he is hanging out in Chequers. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I will certainly. (U)

The President: I always suspected that beneath that ruffled, intellectual demeanor was a real Tory aristocrat working. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: He is out here making a movie. (U)

The President: I know. I told you before that he really wants to help rebuild the movie industry in Great Britain because he is so grateful for its influence. He got a lot of input from early British film makers. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Lots of possibilities here, but also important to them that the U.S. and the British work closely, especially because some of the other countries and some of the stuff from the EU is not very sensible. The French and the Italians have weird rules and prescriptions on film making. It would help if we can get some decent British movies. (U)

The President: You can do it. Tell him I said hello. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: All the best. We'll be in touch. (U)

The President: Bye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: British Prime Minister Tony Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Doug Mueller, Bonnie Glick,
Sean Rice and Larry Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: September 1, 1997, 11:29 - 11:54 a.m.
Martha's Vineyard

The President: Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. It's a grim business, a very grim business. (U)

The President: It's awful, it's really awful. We're up here on Martha's Vineyard vacationing, and we're with a lot of people who knew her. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We saw her again just weeks ago when we hosted her for lunch with Prince William, he's a great kid.

The President: Yeah, I worry a lot about those kids now.

Prime Minister Blair: She was such a rock of stability in the sense she connected them with the outside world. The eldest boy, William, is quite like her in a way, he is very "feet on the ground," he does things kids his age do.

The President: Well, I just feel so bad for her. She was just basically getting a hold of her life.

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks for your telegram yesterday and your kind words. The problem was the way she lived, in a press frenzy. It's impossible to contemplate how intrusive it was, into every single aspect of her life. The last time I spoke with her, she said that were it not for the boys, she’d be off the board. The country is stunned. (et)

The President: They liked her a lot, didn’t they. (et)

Prime Minister Blair: She was not the royal family but she was liked by ordinary people, it gave her problems with the royal establishment. (et)

The President: Well, I know it’s a difficult time for you. I just wanted to let you know I was thinking of you. (et)

Prime Minister Blair: I will personally miss her, it’s like a star falling. She was a star for them. (et)

The President: What do they know? Is the British security guard who was with her still alive? (et)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, he is. And he may be able to offer some more information. There has been some talk this afternoon. They went to the hotel and thought they would be left alone. The Embassy and the French government did not know they were there. The media turned up, so they decided to go to dinner then on to one of al-Fayed’s houses. When they got to their car, it did not start. They called someone from the hotel and the hotel provided a car and driver. Apparently he’d been drinking. (et)

The President: That’s what I was afraid of. Those guys were chasing them? (et)

Prime Minister Blair: Jumped on them as they left the hotel, yet I can’t believe some of the reports of how fast they were going though. It’s just not possible they were going 100 mph - I mean, I know Paris.. They wouldn’t have to be going that fast in those tunnels, though. They must have hit a rim in the road and turned over and smashed into a wall. (et)

The President: It’s a sad thing, I tell you. (et)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, someone we knew and liked. She had a remarkable gift. She was beginning to get her life together. (et)

The President: Yes, Hillary had a nice visit with her a few weeks ago when she was here. We liked her a lot. I just think that anything you can do for those boys, I don’t know how in a situation like this, about the challenges they will face.

Prime Minister Blair: I’ll try to keep in touch and have them over.

The President: What about her sisters? What are they like?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Hillary and I just wanted to tell you all we were thinking of you.

Prime Minister Blair: Your words yesterday were greatly appreciated. Thank you. So you are on holiday now? (U)

The President: I’m having a good holiday. It’s the longest vacation we have had in ten years. We’re getting ready to send Chelsea off to university. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Are you looking forward to that? (U)

The President: She is, but that’s all part of it, it’s what you raise them for. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: You're going straight to California from there, then? (U)

The President: No, we have one more week here, then we go back to Washington for a week to ten days, then we will go to California to take her out there. (U)

You're doing well in Northern Ireland, no? - (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: The Sinn Fein shouldn't have a problem with that. - (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: He's actually been good about this, under the circumstances. - (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Do you think there is anything we can do to Trimble to stroke him? - (G)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: I think they’re worried about being rendered irrelevant in 20 years, given the way the demographics are going, it’s better to make a deal now rather than later.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: If you look at it, their popular majority is eroding over time with the increasing birth rates, so now is the time. You’ll have to come up with some sort of creative dual relationship.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That’s consistent with what you are doing in Scotland and Wales, anyway.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: No one wants to get up and put a sandwich in a lunch tin to go to the factory if you have this going on.

Prime Minister Blair: So all is well with you? You’re getting re-engaged in the Middle East?

The President:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
difficult position, but we don't want to be someone on the outside just seen as complaining. We've got a good set of ideas.

Prime Minister Blair: What's your actual estimate?

The President:

Now that time has passed, there is hope for some progress.
Prime Minister Blair:

Things are getting a little better in Bosnia. Plavsic is showing some get up and go. You’ve got a decision coming your way that we can’t discuss on this line, but I think things are going in the right direction over the last weeks, no the last couple of months, after a bad year. I feel good about this. We’ve got a shot to move it forward. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Tell Cherie I said hello. I just wanted to talk to you today. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Give our love to Hillary. Thanks for calling about Diana. (U)

The President: Take care, friend. Bye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye Bill. All the best. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Tony Blair

Notetakers: Sean Rice, Larry Wright, Tom Crowell, James Smith, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: October 9, 1997, 9:18 - 9:40 a.m. EDT
The Oval Office

The President: Hi, Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. How are you? I am in good form; I just got my party conference out of the way. (U)

The President: It went great, didn’t it? It got great press here. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Well, I feel like a man who is facing an inevitable collapse, but in good shape, actually. How are you? (U)

The President: I’m doing great, thanks. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I saw a great picture of you and Hillary taking Chelsea to Stanford. It was marvelous. (U)

The President: Well, it looked better than it felt. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It looks like she’s having a good time. (U)

The President: She’s very happy. She called last night and we had a good talk. It’s a three-hour difference, so she always calls late, but she knows I’m always up late. She had her first chemistry test. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Look, Bill, the reason I called was to mention a couple of things: I went to Moscow early in the week, and also I have some thoughts on Northern Ireland.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Did he give any hint of whether he would run for another term? (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yeah. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: We will do that. I was very encouraged by my visit with Trimble, he’s trying to be a part of this, more upbeat than in the past.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Did Yeltsin mention the START II treaty?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: How about Iran?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I believe that a lot of things do happen without his knowledge. When they changed their economy, they did not have the intermediate controls in place that a normal economy has. We have a process going with the Vice President, Chernomyrdin, Wisner and Koptev, that I think will work. They say they’re cracking down, but he is careful about what he says in public, maybe because he doesn’t want to be seen to be dancing to our tune. (8)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Oh God, I’m really worried about it. They are so strongly opposed to any of that stuff that I’m quite worried about how they’d react to it.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Let me ask you one other thing. I appreciate your help in keeping the issue over the French oil company Total from becoming a bigger problem. We need to work the twin tracks of an EU waiver and the Total-Gazprom case. I know that a lot of Europeans don’t agree with us, but I’m still concerned about Iran becoming an industrial and military giant, given their philosophy. I’m hoping that the new leadership in time will have enough influence to change things, but there are no indications of this yet. (8)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I’d appreciate anything you can do to help. I don’t want to get crossways with the French and EU. (8)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: The Iranians -- and I sometimes think the Chinese are this way, too -- think we're so motivated by money that we'll eventually cave in.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. So, we're with you on that entirely. People are very supportive of your efforts to bring people around on the environmental issue.

The President: The problem is, the U.S. Senate won't ratify anything I sign. They're in the Dark Ages on this -- mostly the Republicans, but Democrats, too. They're being told against all evidence that you can't do this without wrecking the economy. We had a big conference here this week with energy experts, people who are making a living implementing changes. But with everything going on in Washington, it didn't break through as I'd hoped. It may have moved things a little. I'm chipping away, trying to do everything I can to get us in decent shape, and the Japanese are trying to get us together.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree with that totally.

The President: One thing we ought to do is to some way get the developing countries involved in a regime -- where they don't have the same controls as we -- to develop an alternate energy future. There are things they can do now that won't hamper growth, but they can do it now so that when they become developed, they'll already have a different energy structure. The trick is to get them involved without their thinking that we're trying to choke off their growth; we need their growth for our own sake.
The President: We need to find some formula to participate. If we gamble and take this on, but by the time you get halfway through the century, we’re no better because we’ve been replaced by China and India, still worse off, nothing has happened to lower the global temperature. Get them to talk to us, find a formula to benefit from, build a different energy structure. The Indians are open, they’re doing some big alternative projects, more open than the Chinese. China is giving us grief about criticism of their big Three Gorges hydropower project, which is their biggest greenhouse gas project. Because it will displace a million people and change the ecosystem, all the environmentalists who are fighting global warming are fighting the dam. Biggest dilemma.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree with the same basic point.

Well, carry on. (C)

The President: Yes, we will. Thank you for calling. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I’m looking forward to seeing Hillary when she is here. Everything ok with you? (U)

The President: Great. She is thrilled, looking forward to it, and we are working on a time for you to come here. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It will be great to see you.

The President: Thanks. Bye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Cindy Lawrence, Peter Huggins, Lyle Harrison, James Smith, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: October 22, 1997, 3:53-4:00 p.m. EDT
The Oval Office

The President: Hello? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Hey, Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: How's it going? (U)

The President: The speech went over pretty well, and we've gotten some reasonable press. Some environmental groups are pretty positive, some said we should have tighter deadlines. We've gotten more business support than I thought, but the traditional industries have dumped on it. The best we can hope for right now. I tried to leave open the language on developing nations. I was pretty explicit about the kind of joint projects I think we ought to have, but using the language you gave me, I was general on it. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Well, I don’t know. We’ll have to see how we do here.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Do you know when he’ll be here?

Prime Minister Blair: I’m not sure; in the next few days, I think.

The President: Have him check in with Sandy Berger.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Good, we will work with John and see what we can do.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Well, I’m really encouraged. I guess you know this, we had a plane crash over here and a British pilot was killed. An F-16 and a T-38 were on a photo chase mission and collided over Edwards Air Force Base. There was an American pilot, but there was also a British pilot, Flight Lieutenant Leigh Alexander Fox. His wife is there with him at Edwards, and it is just awful. No one has figured out how it happened. Somehow the F-16 was able to land, but the pilots of the T-38 ejected. Both were found dead. I’ll send you the information on it.

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks, Bill.

The President: We will work on this other thing and see John Prescott when he gets here. Thanks for working with me on this, man.

Prime Minister Blair: Not at all. I’ll be in touch.

The President: OK, bye.

Prime Minister Blair: Alright, Bill, speak to you soon.

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Cindy Lawrence, David Higgins, Anthony Campanella, Peter Huggins, James Smith, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: October 21, 1997, 3:23-3:32 p.m. EDT
The Oval Office

The President: Hey, Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, hello. Tony here. I’m sorry this has to be...I’m in the middle of a big dinner, but I thought I would come out and speak to you about what we spoke about yesterday. (U)

The President: Okay. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I am due to speak to Wim Kok tomorrow.
The President: On joint implementation?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: What I can say there is we know we need to leave some room on language for implementing on how developing countries would participate, but what about targets? That's what I am really worried about.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: The big problem we have here is that I not only talked to you, Kohl and Hashimoto -- and I want you to talk to as many as you can -- but I also briefed Senate leaders this afternoon and I will brief the House on what I am trying to do. It will raise more questions than it will answer if I cancel the speech tomorrow. I see what you're doing, what you want me to do: say what I have to say, but leave as much wiggle room as possible for you.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Alright, I will work on it as well as I can. What I want you to do is to welcome the fact that we are clearly committed to binding targets and clearly committed to participation. If you give negotiations a chance, that would help.
Prime Minister Blair: Very happy to do that.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I have been saying that for months.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: The problem is I will lose all credibility if I don't give some target range. I have to say what our position will be. I will try to figure out a way to give it flexibility, and, on joint implementation, I think I can do precisely what you want.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Alright. Thank you very much.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Well, we are going to get out there and do the best we can. I will try to leave you as much wiggle room as possible.

Prime Minister Blair: Alright, Bill. (U)

The President: Thanks. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: All the very best. Good-bye.

The President: Good-bye.

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Lyle Harrison, J. Laurence Wright II, Jeff Rathke, Anthony Campanella, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: November 15, 1997, 12:40-12:50 p.m. EST
Air Force One, en route Las Vegas to Sacramento

The President: Hello? Hello? We still don't have a good connection. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hello? (U)

The President: Tony, can you hear me? I'm so sorry about the last time. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: No problem. (U)

The President: I am on the airplane and usually it works, but sometimes it doesn't. Thank you for the letter you sent me earlier this week. I want to talk through what I am thinking about this issue.
We all see this looking back through the prism of the Gulf War, but I want to see this looking forward through the prism of the future. My goal in this and my definition of victory, is that this is not a macho contest of getting him to back down, but to reestablish the inspections regime, which I think was a smashing success.

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, I am in total agreement with everything you said. I want you to know we will stick with you throughout this.

The President: I think this is very important. Jacques Chirac is in Vietnam right now, and I am trying to call him. I will talk to Yeltsin and several others over the next two days. If there is anything you can do to promote unity among the allies, I would appreciate it. I understand their position and the popular sympathy in the Middle East for the people of Iraq.
think we need to get people in your country, in France, and elsewhere, to see what UNSCOM has destroyed. They need to see how successful the program of eliminating weapons of mass destruction has been. But there is one thing going on in our country and also in the UN, and that is that the only time Iraq gets attention is when Saddam creates a crisis. If people knew how many weapons UNSCOM inspectors have exposed, they would understand why this is so important. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We may need to talk again several times over the next week, but I won't bother you unless I have to. We will have to work together on this. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, absolutely right. And the more that can be done to publicize the work that UNSCOM has done over the last six years, the better. (C)

The President: Did you see Netanyahu in London? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I did.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I know what you mean.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: I will send you a full report of the meetings, I'm not sure we may have already. Let's keep in touch over the weekend. (C)

The President: Thank you for the meeting and the time you spent with Hillary. She just loved it. It looked like it was very successful. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Yes, it was great. She was in fantastic form. All right then, all the best. (U)

The President: Okay, I will talk to you later. Bye-bye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: George Chastain, Tony Campanella, James Smith, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: December 9, 1997, 3:19-3:24 p.m. EST
The Map Room

The President: Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: How are you doing? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine, how are you? (U)

The President: I’m doing great. I know it’s later there, but I wanted to check in with you. I’ve been on the phone a lot the last three or four days. I think we’ve made a lot of progress in Kyoto and John Prescott has been very helpful. We have made quite an effort to come to a common position, and I’ve authorized our negotiators to show more flexibility.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
I’ve tried to move to the European position on targets and timetables, based on some variation of the proposal on the table. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: They’re getting closer. If we can get all the big, Annex 1 countries to agree, maybe get the developing countries to do more. They agree on joint implementation projects, but they're still resisting Article 10. They seem to think that we'll coerce them into joining.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Really? You may have more up to date information than I do.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That's pretty good.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, we will get a lot of abuse, and I'm going to get a lot of abuse at home. And I can't get it ratified unless we get commitments under Article 10 from developing countries.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I do, too. We have one more day, and maybe we can talk tomorrow, if we need to.

Prime Minister Blair: I hope it is okay.
The President: Thank you. This is good news.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Me, too.

Prime Minister Blair: Is everything fine with you? (U)

The President: Fine. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, I will try to find out exactly what is happening on Kyoto and we can talk again tomorrow if there is a continuing problem. (U)

The President: Okay, I'll be available. Let's bring it home. Goodbye, my friend. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, goodbye. (U)

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: James Smith, George Chastain, Bonnie Glick, Tom Crowell, Larry Wright, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: January 27, 1998, 10:30 - 10:41 a.m. EST
The Oval Office

The President: Hello

Prime Minister Blair: Hello

The President: Tony! How are you doing?

Prime Minister Blair: Bill! I'm doing fine, and I'm thinking about you.

The President: I'm doing alright, I'm slogging on. I think it'll be alright.

Prime Minister Blair: I just wanted to say that anything that you want me to do or say, I'm happy to do. You have my 100 percent support, and Cherie sends her love.

The President: When you're here, we can talk about it. One or two things might actually make a difference, and we will talk about it.

Prime Minister Blair: Well, anything you want, we'll do it.

The President: I wanted to talk to you a little bit about Iraq and Northern Ireland.
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I really appreciate your saying that.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
Prime Minister Blair: I agree with that.

The President: I generally agree with that, but there's not a lot of time left, we waited a long time, until the end of the Muslim holy period. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Ok. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: What is your sense about the timing of this? (E)

The President: It's going to take a couple of weeks to get together, but not much longer. I would imagine we will be ready to move with it not long after you're here. (E)
Prime Minister Blair: So we should have a chance to talk about it when...

The President: We are on an open line, so I will have Sandy get with your people.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Where are we on Northern Ireland, Loyalist violence?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: So we need to work to keep them from doing that, right?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I understand.
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Well, I worked like hell on the Middle East last week, but I didn't get very far. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Thank you so much for what you said. We'll talk a little about it when you arrive. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. Anyway, we're thinking of you, Bill.

The President: Take care man.

Prime Minister Blair: OK, bye.

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Meeting with Tony Blair, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom

PARTICIPANTS: The President
The Vice President
Madeleine Albright, Secretary of State
Samuel Berger, Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs
Donald K. Bandler, Special Assistant to the President and Senior Director for European Affairs, Notetaker

Tony Blair, Prime Minister
John Holmes, Principal Private Secretary to the Prime Minister
John Sawers, Notetaker

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: February 5, 1998, 11:00 a.m.-12:40 p.m.
Oval Office

The President: We're off to a good start, Tony. Shall we turn to Northern Ireland? How do you see the prospects for peace and how can I help? (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I agree, and some others do as well, but not everyone thinks the ceasefire will hold. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Samuel Berger: Your efforts to develop the equality agenda seem to us a key in the effort to keep the Republicans in the process. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree. We will continue our contacts and dialogue with Sinn Fein. I also intend to keep seeing Trimble and the other key Unionist leaders when they come to town. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

Thank you again for your continuing help on this critical dimension of the peace process. (U)

The President: Let’s turn now to Iraq. What is your assessment after your trip, Madeleine? (U)

Secretary Albright: The trip worked rather well.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: I agree that their willingness to open eight sites is interesting and offers some hope that our approach could lead to an acceptable formula.

Samuel Berger:

The President: Yes, that might be acceptable if a few political people were there in addition to the essential UNSCOM team.

Secretary Albright:
The Vice President: In the meantime, we are getting new pressures, especially from Capitol Hill, to go after Saddam’s head. (3)

The President: That’s right, Tony, and you just heard our press making exactly that point. But that approach is nowhere near as simple as it sounds on the surface. (3)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That’s what is working and will work. (3)
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
Prime Minister Blair: Our public opinion is not the same as yours, but we are working hard to educate the public. We put out a white paper yesterday on Iraq's WMD programs. (U)

The President: I heard it is an outstanding document. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We have to educate international opinion so they see the real threat and choices we face. (U)

The President:

Secretary Albright: If we do a white paper, it could create a panicky reaction. (U)

The President: But such a paper could also give us a margin of maneuver. It would show how much UNSCOM has accomplished in reducing his stocks and capacity -- but not his future potential. (U)

Secretary Albright:

The President: Al, what do you think? (U)

The Vice President:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
ISCAP appeal 2013-090 Document 14 Page 8 was not included as part of the materials in this appeal because it could not be found.
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: K.C. Brown, Cindy Lawrence, Anthony Campanella, Joel Schrader and James Smith

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: February 16, 1998, 5:14 – 5:41 p.m. EST
Camp David, Maryland

The President: Hello? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Hey, Tony. I saw you on the Prime Minister’s question time on C-SPAN yesterday. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: What a treat for you! (U)

The President: You got one hateful comment on Iraq from one of your back benchers, and one hit you on welfare reform. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It doesn’t much matter which row they come from, they’re very often stingers. (U)

The President: It kind of reminds me of Paul Wellstone over here. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Well you know, it is from a very usual suspect. On Iraq, they are pretty good on the whole so it doesn’t much matter. So you watched? What did you think of my opposite number there? (C)

The President: I didn’t see him. I only saw the last 10 minutes of you answering questions. (C)
Prime Minister Blair: It is the sort of thing you would do really well, but frankly I could do without it every Wednesday.

The President: Well they just replayed it on C-SPAN last night. So, how are you doing?

Prime Minister Blair: I'm doing fine. We have two big problems to take care of at the moment: Northern Ireland and Iraq.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yeah. He was very good. I called him after you told me to and he was very good.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: You're doing right. Absolutely right. I'll support you on this. Even our Irish guys have been great. Kennedy and Dodd say there is no choice and they promised to get in touch with Adams to say [gap].

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Let's hope they behave while they are out. That's the key, isn't it? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Taking care of Buddy are you? (U)

The President: Yes, he's got to go outside. I have a door right here. I will let him out. (Pause) Sorry. Hillary is at another place working. We are not together. We're at Camp David. Here's the problem we all have to watch. Because of European public opinion and Arab public opinion, we don't want to look blood thirsty and have to go the last mile. Saddam needs a face saver. Kofi Annan would love to go in and save the day, which is fine with me. The problem from my point of view is, we can give them some sort of change in appearance here on how to deal with the presidential palaces but it can't undermine the integrity of the inspections and turn it from a professional process to fundamentally a political one. We are trying to arrive at language, whereby they open Presidential sites to UNSCOM but palaces would be treated differently. Palaces would be open to diplomats and political personages. I think we are agreed, at least that is what Sandy said. Apparently the actual palaces would be subject to UNSCOM and then Annan could name diplomats to go with them. But if you take UNSCOM out of the decision making and let Annan make all the decisions, the pressures on him would be enormous for a different standard. Annan is talking about taking Ekeus with him. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: He's Swedish, right? (U)

The President: Yes. He was Butler's predecessor. He's now the ambassador to the United States as fate would have it. But that might not be all bad, even though Ekeus is viewed as softer than Butler because he didn’t put heat on the presidential sites. The truth is Ekeus was there at the beginning and he had so damn much work to do on other places that it was an acceptable compromise at the time. He wasn’t really at the point because he was full up on other sites. It might work out all right. My worst nightmare is being isolated because we can’t agree to something that looks perfectly all right on the surface. We simply have to insist on technically qualified inspectors. Look, I wouldn’t know a chemical lab from a football field. We have a good opening position but the trouble is there is no place to go after the opening. You and I have to work closely together on this. I called King Hassan and had a long talk with him. He has been a good friend of the United States and of mine.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

I told him to go to Saddam, call him and tell him that I have no interest in killing him or hunting him down. I’m not fooling with him. I just don’t want his chemical and biological program going forward. By the way, the memo you put out on the web is phenomenally successful. But you must know that. Everybody wants it. (G)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I agree. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: My view, very clearly indeed, is that the bottom line all the way through is that the inspectors have got to be able to do their job uninhibited. I don’t care who accompanies the inspectors provided they are not interfering with the inspectors. That doesn’t trouble me. (G)

The President: I agree. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Where Saddam is at the moment is that he will let us in to the presidential sites, but only once, and Annan into the presidential palaces.

The President: It puts him in a terrible position. It looks good to him because he gets to be a peacemaker and the real issues are technical. Let me go back to the history a bit. The history is that UNSCOM originally was set up answerable to the Security Council and not to him, and he doesn't particularly like that. There was a working group and an oversight board. But there is a permanent staff at UNSCOM. The real problem is, for example, that if it were put under the Secretary General and out from under UNSCOM, all decisions would come to him: it would be up to him to determine which site to inspect, where and when. They would have to go back to him and he would decide when the files got closed, and which sites need future monitoring. What we tried to do is say, look we don't want to make those decisions either. We only care that independent, technical people are making the inspections.

Politically, the idea of letting these inspectors decide when to inspect and where to inspect and when to close files and which sites most likely require future monitoring is very important. You can dress it up in a lot of different ways. Our opening position, which Sandy said your guys signed off on, we can take to Kofi and the French and the Russians, but then what? It is hard to think of a fallback position if the French and Russians push us on this. I have enormous regard for Kofi Annan. I think he is a heck of a man, what I have found out dealing with this is that most people, even in our own country, have not thought much about the facts of chemical and biological weapons and how little space it takes to produce them and their capacity for delivering this stuff now. That is what basically concerns me. They say in the Middle East we are hypocrites. They say there are others who have this, they say the Israelis, but no one else has shown a willingness to use them or share them with anyone else.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d) tell me this because I don’t quite understand it, where is Saddam Hussein on this, where does he come down on this? My people have been unable to tell me.

The President: We don’t know either. The only outstanding issue is who is in charge of the presidential site inspections. He even tried to get Newt Gingrich to bring a congressional delegation to the presidential sites. Newt was smart enough to know that one site has nearly 100 buildings that could be warehousing these chemicals, labs, and stuff.

Prime Minister Blair: A huge complex.

The President: On biological agents, you hardly need a room the size of a photographer’s darkroom to do it.

Prime Minister Blair: That’s right. Is he now saying the only outstanding issue is not the presidential sites but simply who authorizes inspections?

The President: It is my understanding...I’ve had so damn many conversations today, I am not sure I remember. I’m not sure I know the answer on monitoring and coming back again. My understanding is what he says is the outstanding issue is who gets to come into the presidential sites.

Prime Minister Blair: Sites or palaces?

The President: Both, I think. He has a higher standard for palaces than sites, but he is basically saying he will let someone come in and look at both categories.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes and basically he thinks Kofi will be responsive to political pressures if he does that and will take us off line. Saddam thinks Butler is a stooge of America, but hell, I never even talk to Butler. He is a tough guy and I like what he is doing. I’ve reached the conclusion after eliminating all possible alternatives that Saddam still has the makings of a chemical and biological program he doesn't want to give up.

Prime Minister Blair:  E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes. I'm looking at some other things we can do and will call you back to talk about it. We'll need to stay together on this. If our two staffs are together and if he says he wants Kofi to make all of the calls, then we need to construct a good argument why that is not a good thing.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Awful.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I am going to talk to him tomorrow—or maybe tonight. If I get any clue, I'll let you know. Listen Tony, what's the most direct contact you have had with Iraq since 1991? For instance, has the British Foreign Minister talked to Tariq Aziz?

Prime Minister Blair: I honestly don't know. I'll have to check and get back to you.

The President: If I weren't constrained by the press, I would pick up the phone and call the son of a bitch. But that is such a heavy-laden decision in America. I can't do that and I don't think you can.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: I agree.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I can't tell you how critical it is. It costs us a hell of a lot of money to do all this moving around we are doing, not counting the political costs.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Agree, but I will have a hard time selling anything here short of military action, but I can do that if I know it is real.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Can't allow that.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I can't agree more.
Prime Minister Blair: If we stay in close contact tomorrow, when will we send him off to Baghdad? (E)

The President: I don't know. He wants to go Wednesday or Thursday. I will let you know. Let's keep in close touch on this. If you want to talk about this, I don't care if you get me up in the middle of the night if you want to. There is hardly anything more important. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: If I have more thoughts tomorrow, I'll just give you a call, shall I? (E)

The President: Yes, I'm not doing much more. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay. Goodbye, Bill, all the best. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telecon with British Prime Minister Blair

PARTICIPANTS: President Clinton
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Larry Wright, Tony Campanella, Bob Ford, Tom Crowell, Jim Smith, Peter Huggins

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: FEBRUARY 12, 1998, 4:05 - 4:20 p.m. EST Oval Office

The President: Hello?

Prime Minister Blair: Hi Bill.

The President: Hey.

Prime Minister Blair: How are you?

The President: All right. We had a wonderful time with you here. I hope you enjoyed it half as much as we did.

Prime Minister Blair: We had an absolutely fantastic time. We especially enjoyed Friday night and Saturday morning.

The President: You've turned me into an icon for everyone at the State dinner.

Prime Minister Blair: We had a great time. We are so pleased at all the time you and Hillary spent with us; we really enjoyed it. I hope it wasn't too fraught or difficult for you.

The President: Everything is going okay from what we can see here; we had a great time and wanted to thank you for that.

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, I have a problem now.
The President: I know you do.

Prime Minister Blair: I spoke with Bertie Ahern this evening and here is how the land lies. There have been two murders carried out.

President Clinton: What were they thinking about?

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
President Clinton: They haven't protested their innocence, have they?

Prime Minister Blair:

President Clinton: What are they thinking? Do you think this is payback for what happened before?

Prime Minister Blair:

President Clinton: Within the IRA?

Prime Minister Blair:

President Clinton: Can you get Bertie to go along with what ever you do?

Prime Minister Blair:
President Clinton: The only thing we've done so far, because we thought it would be what you wanted, is we got in touch with Sinn Fein and told them they have to make a statement and have the IRA make a statement.

Prime-Minister Blair:

President Clinton: We have said that. I want to do whatever I can to be helpful, really helpful, it's important for me to keep this thing going. I don't want to get in the position of you and me against Ireland. I want some influence over those people...

Prime Minister Blair:

President Clinton: Let me call him. Give me one more chance to hit these people, to get them to make a tough statement because you can't be caught in the middle of this: you are in a hell of a pickle.

Prime Minister Blair:

President Clinton: Me too. It's so damned stupid unless they have a split between them and their bad guys...
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 14(b)(d)

President Clinton: ...and their bad guys got out of hand and their good guys don't think they have the strength to kick them publicly. It doesn't make a lick of sense.

Prime Minister Blair: No, I agree with that.

President Clinton: You are the best friend they have and they are lucky as hell they've got you in there. This is so stupid, but let me do this. Let me get in touch with Bertie and we'll get back together. I want to do it in a way that's possible to keep this going.

Prime Minister Blair: I just want to tell you Bill.

President Clinton: I agree. Let me get on this and we will be back in touch. I am really sorry Tony this happened to you.

Prime Minister Blair: Well, there have been ups and downs all the way through this. We just have to make sure this works.

President Clinton: Thanks, man.

Prime Minister Blair: Let's get back in touch.

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Peter Huggins, Bonnie Glick, Tom Crowell, Lawrence Butler, Gwenyth Todd and Joe Marty

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: February 22, 1998, 1:15 - 1:26 p.m. EST
The Residence

The President: Hello? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hello Bill. How are you? (U)

The President: Fine, thank you. Have you talked to Kofi? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I talked to him last night, but not today. He said he was going to call me.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Well, I'll tell you what I heard. We picked up a little intelligence this morning.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Now I don't know all the facts, we just have to wait. The main thing I wanted to say is that it is really important to stay in close contact and stay determined on this.

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: All I got is secondhand rumor. All Madeleine has is a cryptic call saying all the elements are in place. Who knows what that means? [E]

Prime Minister Blair: Who does Butler work under anyway? [E]

The President: He works for the Security Council. UNSCOM is the Security Council.

Prime Minister Blair: I totally agree with that. [E]

The President: This is twice he's done this. If it happens again, it's our fault, not his. [E]

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: Here's the thing. We need to make sure, in fairness to him and to us, we need to make sure we are speaking in the same terminology. CNN had some damn fool of a reporter saying these sites are smaller than I had led the American public to believe. If you're talking about the palaces, that's one thing. If you are talking about the grounds, that is quite another. If we ask Kofi to revisit where someone is living, some house with a lab in the basement that's one thing. But some of those sites have a hundred warehouse-sized buildings.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
The President: We have got to have another resolution so we don't have to go through this again.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair: I have to travel for 45 minutes today, but other than that I am in Chequers or Downing Street. You're at Camp David?

The President: No, I stayed at the White House this weekend because I think this thing is going to break. OK, we're totally agreed on this situation, then, how do you feel on this Northern Ireland thing?
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Adams is not coming here, which is good news.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I'll do that.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I want to work with you. I don't want to undercut you. I'm pleased. You're doing well so far, we will just stay in touch. This Iraqi thing might break in the next six hours.

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, obviously it's earlier for you, but whatever time... (C)

The President: Alright. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

The President: Thank you. Goodbye friend. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Peter Huggins, Tom Crowell, Jeff Rathke, Lawrence Butler and Gwenyth Todd

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: February 22, 1998, 4:38 - 4:49 p.m. EST
The Residence

The President: Hi, Tony. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. You’re faint. (U)

The President: Can you hear me now? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: I’ve spoken with Kofi and I gather he’s spoken to Madeleine as well. (U)

The President: Yeah. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: But I’m not sure. Have you been able to glean any more detail? (U)

The President: Well, I haven’t.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yeah, I don’t think he wanted to talk on the phone, and our guys are guessing on it, too. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Well, I hope he hasn’t either, but I’m just not sure. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We just have to wait and see what happens. If there is another violation we need to seriously consider funding opposition groups and giving whatever help we can and just cut the umbilical cord. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yeah, and it’s weird, because Kofi is not coming back until Tuesday. It’s going to leak. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: It’s bound to. (C)

The President: It would put poor old Butler in a terrible situation. Madeleine talked to him today, but couldn’t say much. We don’t want him to spout off without knowing what kind of deal it is. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I’ve never come across him. What kind of bloke is he? (C)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: Madeleine couldn’t get the details out of him? (C)
The President: No, she doesn't know much more than you do.

Prime Minister Blair: He said he's going to have a press conference tomorrow morning. What's he going to say then?

The President: We don't know. I think he's going to say tomorrow morning that he has a deal but he can't really talk about it until he comes back and briefs us. Then he will stop in Paris and give Chirac his plane back and come on over here. What else can I tell you? I just don't know.

Prime Minister Blair: And there's no one he's going to see in Paris?

The President: Yeah, no.

Prime Minister Blair: If he just lands and takes off again...

The President: I don't know, I just heard he will stop in Paris and then fly on to New York City.

Prime Minister Blair: He may say he won't talk or speak to anybody, but on the other hand, we have got to know what is happening.

The President: Yeah.
The President: That's what I worry about -- I talked to Madeleine and Sandy before I talked to you. Let me see what I can find out -- they think it can work if it is strictly administered by Kofi, but we need to know what Butler's going to say about it. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Apparently he did that, but maybe Kofi gets to decide who goes back, and when. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yep, uh-huh. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yep, but if we can't get it, we have to say what we were going to say anyway. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I think we'd better get working on that right away. I hate being in this position for the next thirty-six hours. (U)

The President: That's really bad. Let me call my crowd back and see what they say, what we can work out. I don't like being in this position. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I can try to contact Kofi and tell him that when he gets to Paris he needs to call us right away, that we really need to know what is going on. I think I will try that. (U)

The President: Okay. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yep. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Bill, I'll get John Weston to start working on the Security Council thing right away. And in the meantime, I'll try to find out some more from Baghdad. (C)

The President: Okay. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It's a curious way of doing business. (C)

The President: Yeah. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It's a weird deal. (C)

The President: Yes, Madeleine does. I'll see what we can do there, too. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: That bothers me. Kofi's wait gives him a chance to spin it, and I don't like that. (C)

The President: Yes, Madeleine does. I'll see what we can do there, too. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay. Right, Bill--I am here all night if you need to get a hold of me... (C)
The President: I'll do it. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Alright. Thank you. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks, Bill. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Pat O'Shaughnessy, Bonnie Glick, Tom Crowell, Jeff Rathke, Lawrence Butler and Don Bandler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: February 23, 1998, 8:57 - 9:12 a.m. EST
The Residence

The President: Hello? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill, how are you doing? How stand we, then? (U)

The President: Let me tell you what I have been told about the document. First of all, the good things.

I think we have to study this document and listen carefully to what Kofi says tomorrow. (ex)

It is important that the commission rush a group of qualified experts -- I think that we have to test the agreement soon. You know, we have to get whatever the agreement is: show up at one of these sites and start looking around. I'd like to do it before I have to move the whole U.S. Navy around again. Now,

CONFIDENTIAL

Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(b,d)
Declassify On: 2/18/08

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
Baghdad has done this before with weapons of mass destruction.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

First of all, you need to get this thing and look at it. What I would like is to be in a position in the next two or three hours to talk to Yeltsin and Chirac.

I want to compliment Kofi and say we understand they have agreed to free and unfettered access.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

You guys get this document. He is going to make it widely available in an hour. Let's go through it.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Exactly, my view is that we may have another twenty-four to thirty-six hours of word wrangling. We just have to see.

Prime Minister Blair: We very much hope this will work out. That's my approach.

Prime Minister Blair: You're going to say something publicly, are you, Bill?

The President: I'm not going to say anything for three or four hours -- I may not be able to, but I'm going to try. The trick is to embrace the effort, pocket his commitment, and thank Kofi for getting it, and he has never done this before.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree with that.
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Tony, I don't know the answer to that. We haven't studied the agreement closely, and Kofi isn't here, so we can't call him.

Prime Minister Blair: No one has spoken to Kofi?

The President: He told me he'd call me from Paris. I don't know if he will or not. I talked to him late last night. You know, he clearly thinks he has a good deal, the question is whether his definition of a good deal is the same as ours.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: You and I don't want to rain on it, because if we hadn't been tough, we wouldn't have had the damned deal. We can't completely embrace it until we see the details. We don't want to be in the position of buying a pig in a poke and then say, "Holy cow -- we don't know what happened to it."

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Absolutely. Sandy says we ought to say our message is, "Yes, if."

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:
Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That's why I just have to leave everyone where they are, because we have to have a test. I have to leave our troops in place.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We're having a vigorous agreement here. Any time in the next two hours you want to talk, after you have seen it, let me know.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I wish you would. I understand Yeltsin can take my call in one hour. Chirac said he can't take my call for two-and-a-half hours. That's a long time. He called here earlier, while I was still in bed, and said he didn't want them to wake me. I don't think it's evasion, I think it's just the schedule. It may be better not to talk to them right away. You get the document and parse it a little, and see if there are any holes in the road. I'll try to call you before I talk to Yeltsin and Chirac. Otherwise, I'll just talk to Yeltsin.

Prime Minister Blair: The moment I get the document I will look at it carefully. And we can talk later.

The President: Goodbye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks, bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: James Smith, Pat O'Shaughnessy, Tom Crowell, Bonnie Glick, Jeff Rathke, Nancy McElidowney, Rexon Ryu

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: February 23, 1998, 12:28-12:42 p.m. EST
The Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Tony, how are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine, I'm fine.

The President: Hold on. Here's one, go on. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

CONFIDENTIAL
Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(b,d)
Declassify On: 2/26/08
The President: Who's the commissioner?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I couldn't agree more. We believe he'll appoint a guy with technical expertise, who will have credibility with Butler, but it certainly needs to be.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I couldn't agree more. You've identified the same things I'm worried about. Sandy suggested a phrase which is quite good; our position on this should be to clarify and test. We need to clarify, then test.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I agree with that entirely.
The President: One thing that we thought of doing, is to get Butler back in the ballgame, because we don’t want him out; Kofi is supposed to consult with Butler and the head of the IAEA, and presumably that will keep him from undermining the integrity.

Butler doesn’t think he can get a team in there until the 1st, that’s almost a week. What is today, the 23rd, so that’s six days from now. He doesn’t think he can get a good team in there, but I think that having someone say, “we’re UNSCOM and we want to check the Ministry of Defense” would be a good way to check in a hurry.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I understand. We need to ask all these questions, but no matter how good his answers, we need an early test.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: It will take me a few weeks to withdraw troops from the Gulf, so we will sit tight. I think we need to test, as you said, test under 4 but also 5, because there are sensitive sites that aren’t presidential sites. Also, it will take longer under Para 4 to get started.

Prime Minister Blair: I think that is right.

Has anyone spoken to Kofi?

The President: I spoke to him last night at 8:30 my time, which was 4:30 his time. He was a little groggy, but he wanted to demonstrate to us that the agreement would fully meet the P-5 instructions he took to Baghdad. I said that’s great, but at that time I hadn’t seen the agreement. He promised to call me when he got to Paris. I don’t know if he’s in Paris, but I understood that he did not want to talk in enormous detail over Irish phones.

Prime Minister Blair: No, quite smart.

The President: Now, let me tell you some good news, potentially. I spoke with Yeltsin, and went over my concerns,

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: That's pretty good.

The President: That's pretty damn good.

The President: My relationship with Yeltsin is such that all his hard-liners believe I could talk to Yeltsin and get him to sell the oil wells for three dollars and a half, but that's not true. He's just more far-sighted and progressive than they are. Half the time they go to work on him, and I have no doubt that they'll make some effort to undermine this. He was quick and unambiguous, and one thing about Yeltsin, he doesn't like for people to take advantage of him. If Saddam Hussein doesn't do it, Yeltsin would take it as a personal insult to him. I think he wants to do right, so if he can stay hitched, I really believe that's the best guarantor we have that he'll observe the agreement. If you talk to Yeltsin, I would appreciate it if you would reinforce this.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: You should say you've talked to me and you agree with me,

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely right. Did you say you've spoken to Chirac, Bill?

The President: I'll talk to him after I talk to you. And if I get anything, I may talk to you after I talk to him.
Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That’s it, you got it. LET

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill, let’s keep in touch. LET

The President: Thanks. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Bonnie Glick, Tom Crowell, Joel Schrader, Jeff Rathke, James Smith and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: March 9, 1998, 5:38 - 6:05 p.m. EST
The Oval Office

The President: Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. How are you? (U)

The President: Great. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, I'm sorry to trouble you. There are a couple of things I wanted to discuss with you. First of all, the Middle East Peace Process.

The President: Let me tell you where we are and we may be able to do something together. You mean you have aid to facilitate some of these things?

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

CONFIDENTIAL
Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5 (B,d)
Declassify On: 3/17/08
Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: Let me tell you where we are and then we'll talk about it.

I think they're really ready to go now on the airport and the industrial park, but they keep messing around with each other. I think they're afraid, each for different reasons, to go ahead. I had to put this off until the Iraq thing was resolved, temporarily, at least. What I'd like to do is give them this proposal and coordinate with you. Part of the proposal is that we want them to go ahead and finish the industrial park and get on to safe passage.

Prime Minister Blair: When do you think you will put forth your proposal?

The President: As soon as I can. This month; within the next two weeks.

Prime Minister Blair: Right.

The President: Arafat is afraid to take a redeployment now and go to final status talks without a guaranteed third one; my view is he can always make a final deal, and more is better than less.
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I think there might be a way to do that. What I'd like to do...if I could give them the overall proposal first, then we could get together and put this to them. I think if we could coordinate that way, it would give them a way to get started on it. By putting more money on the table, it would create a -- if they're looking for a reason -- an excuse to go forward, it would be good.

Prime Minister Blair: Right. You reckon you will put your proposal forward in the next couple of weeks?

The President: Absolutely.

Prime Minister Blair: Some sort of redeployment package including the other issues as well?

The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair: Then we could help by having some sort of quadrilateral summit afterwards.

The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes. We're ready to go back to them and I think we have some chance of getting them to move.
Prime Minister Blair: I'm set to go to the Middle East in April, early April. Obviously it would help to have something fairly concrete up and running before then.

The President: We'll have something by then.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We had a good day yesterday. They were able to go into the Ministry of Defense and get some records out which I am hopeful will resolve something one way or another. The fact that they were able to get into ministry buildings is a real reaffirmation of UNSCOM's ability to fulfill the understanding Kofi says they got. Now we have to continue to test compliance on sensitive sites, which will happen near the end of the month, but my own view is we should leave our forces there to monitor compliance and keep the integrity of UNSCOM strong.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes, I thought we ought to fight it off. My own view is that Saddam got what he asked and we got what we asked for, and not to politicize UNSCOM.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Absolutely.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That's right.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: So far I'm feeling pretty good about it. I'm keeping my fingers crossed.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Oh yeah. I saw him. I'll call him in the next few days. He doesn't want me to make this proposal.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: They're really down, and they've got reason to be down.

Prime Minister Blair: I think the Palestinians are coupling redeployment with some of these other issues. By all means, if you guys in the United States can put together a big package, that's fine. Since we have so much aid tied up in this, we should try to move on smaller stuff, as well.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

The President: I couldn't agree more. I pleaded for a year to move on all three things.

Let us put our proposal to them and let's see if we can get together and meet and we can push ahead. That can give them the boost to move to permanent status talks.

Prime Minister Blair: Right, okay, Bill, just one other thing on Northern Ireland.

The President: Where are we on that?

Prime Minister Blair: We're getting along, basically.
The President: You do?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We'll do that. Mo's coming too, isn't she?

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, I think she is. So you can see them all.

The President: Let me ask you this: have you gotten a good reaction to Straw's extradition decision?

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, I mean we got a good reaction in certain quarters -- as usual, it was a good reaction in certain quarters and not so good in others, and that's just the way it is.

The President: I will do my best to bang their heads together and caution them on good conduct, but attacks are likely to come from quarters none of us can control.
Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I do.

The President: When will the referendum be?

Prime Minister Blair: In May.

The President: When?

Prime Minister Blair: A bit of that,

So there it is, really, Bill. We just have to keep pushing on.

The President: Alright. We'll be in touch. We'll coordinate with your people on the peace process in the next two weeks, we'll hang around in Iraq to see what happens, and I'll do what you ask on St. Patrick's Day. That's just a week from tomorrow. I'll report back if I hear anything interesting.

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, okay.
The President: How are you doing? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm fine, actually. (U)

The President: It looks like your economy's still pumping along. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It is, I remember you telling me once that once the guys start coming in with good news, there are other guys telling you that it's not good news. (U)

The President: Wall Street used to go down every time the economy would grow. Now it doesn't go down as much, now that there's been such a long period without inflation. I think if you have the same experience, then soon investors and ordinary folks begin to agree, and that's good news. There's a guy at Stanford who is an economist, and who coincidentally is the son of DNC Chairman Roy Roemer. He's a bit of a libertarian, but he argues that in the technological era, in countries with open markets, the constraints of the business cycle have been considerably loosened, and you can grow more and longer. All of us are essentially underestimating productivity and the most important economic policy is not to limit the ability of technology to prod the economy. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Well, I hope to goodness he's right. (U)

The President: Me, too. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We keep looking across the Atlantic hoping it will happen. (U)

The President: Well, I think it will. I think it's coming to you, and unemployment is way down, and you've got to stick with it. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We have a very tough battle ahead on welfare, there are a lot of things to do there. (U)

The President: Are the Tories going to vote against you or with you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: And with the parliamentary system, it really pays off. If I could have waited another year for elections, I'd still have a majority. I think you're doing the right thing: as long as you have the muscle and juice, go ahead and go.

Prime Minister Blair: Well that's what I reckon. Anyway, we are testing this theory to destruction!

The President: Ha! You'll be alright. I'm looking forward to Birmingham.

Prime Minister Blair: Well, that'll be great. We are looking forward to having you. Is Hillary well?

The President: She's great. You need to decide, we all do, if anything would be served by me going to Ireland after Birmingham.

Prime Minister Blair: We'll know that in the next few weeks, if
The President: Yes, alright. Well I'll see you soon. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. All the best. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Peter Huggins, Sean Rice, Tony Campanella, Jim Smith and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: March 20, 1998, 5:18 - 5:50 p.m. EST
The Residence

The President: Tony. How are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine, thank you very much. I spent the day in Germany. (U)

The President: Where are you in Germany, Berlin? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I went to see Helmut Kohl. I went to Bonn. (U)

The President: I like Bonn. It's a sweet little town. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I like it as well. (U)

The President: What is your take on the elections and on Schroeder? (S)

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)]
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yeah, he's a wonderful man.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That's interesting, but remember, Tony, he was 18 points down in the last election, but I'm afraid in this last term they haven't been able to restore any growth. He looked good in the beginning.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Scharping?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, Scharping.

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d) That is what kept us going in 1992.

Prime Minister Blair: There was a sort of buzz about the place. We had a good time. Bill, thanks for everything you've done on Ireland.

The President: I tried to do exactly what you asked me to do.

Prime Minister Blair: And you did. I deeply appreciated it. I can't tell you how much. E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: I tried to use public and private meetings. I met with all of them. Well almost all of them.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I see something else relevant in my observation of the Middle East, and Bosnia where we sent in an occupying army. If we didn’t, the peace would have led to more violence.

One problem is there are always enemies of peace out there. The people that killed Rabin and blew up the bombs knew exactly what they were doing. They were each other’s best friends. As part of this peace deal, we have to make the deal first, but you have to have someone you trust thinking about the next steps. It is not too soon to start thinking about what you want me to do and speculate what kind of outbursts or problems you envision in the next few years. I am prepared to make whatever reasonable investment I can. I’m worried that some enemy of peace will gum it up, stop the investment coming in there and torment people. You have to have somebody thinking about it, someone you trust but who’s not involved: don’t take your eye off the ball. Churchill and Roosevelt were thinking about the UN in 1943 and 1944. It’s not too soon to start thinking about this.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I know.
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
Prime Minister Blair: When are you off to Africa, Bill? (S)

The President: Sunday. We're very excited. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It's quite a big trip. (U)

The President: Yes, for the United States. No American president has even been to Africa. Carter went to Nigeria and Liberia and Roosevelt and Reagan stopped over there. It's unconscionable what we haven't done in Africa. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I think it's a fascinating continent. I'm really excited for you. (U)

The President: Keep your fingers crossed. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: All the best to you. I see you have been defeating your enemies as usual. Keep it up. (C)

The President: They've got a lot of money out there to get people to say a lot of stuff. We're doing extremely well, but it's a weird way to live. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: We'll talk more the next time we meet. Every time we see another one fall, we cheer. (C)

The President: Take care, man. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill and lots of love to Hillary. (U)

The President: Okay. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Peter Huggins, Anthony Campanella, Robert Ford, Karen Harris and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: April 5, 1998, 2:08 - 2:24 p.m. EDT
The Residence

The President: Hey Tony. How are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm fine, absolutely fine. You had a successful trip over there. The crowd scenes were amazing. (U)

The President: Unbelievable! It was my first time. We really had a great time. We did some things that most people don't do in South Africa. We got into the townships and little villages. They were very good. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It looked fantastic. You really made an impact on them. It was a big boost to those countries. It will be a bigger boost to the people than to the government. (U)

The President: Well, I hope so. How are we doing in Ireland? (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

SECRET
Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(b)(d)
Declassify On: 4/6/08
The President: Is there anything else that you want me to do?

Prime Minister Blair: I don't think at the moment.

The President: I had a good round on Saint Patrick's Day. I really got to know each of them.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: There is something else I would like to discuss: the meeting I had with Mandela when Bandar magically showed up.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I knew him before I became President.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes, I agree with that. We need to know things;

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

SECRET

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That's my theory.

Prime Minister Blair: I'm going in a couple of weeks time.

The President: Oh good. By then we should have a clear path on what to do by then.

Prime Minister Blair: It's touch and go all the time.

The President: Let me know if you want me to do anything.

Prime Minister Blair: Good.
Prime Minister Blair: Alright, Bill. Say hello to Hillary, bye. (U)

The President: Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair. (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Peter Huggins, Joseph Wright, James Smith, Anthony Campanella and Robert Ford

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: April 24, 1998, 11:36-11:52 a.m. EDT
The Oval Office

The President: Hello. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Hello, Tony. How are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine. Bill, I thought we should have a word to bring you up to date on Northern Ireland and the Middle East.

The President: Yeah, I saw some of Trimble's guys made a big show when you voted.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I wonder if there is anything I can do from this end. I will have some announcements when I go to Birmingham; there are a number of things we can do, even if they don't want me to go to Ireland. One of the things we could do is have Bertie come down to Birmingham and make a 10 to 15 minute presentation to the G-8, and you and I could go out and make some statements that there are some goodies on the horizon.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: In terms of my going there, I have no feelings at all on it. I just want to win the vote. This thing could be a parochial vote and those unionists could say, "this is our lives and our futures, we have to decide."

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Why don't we do an informal poll at the end of the first week in May, see where the undecided voters are by religion, and see if that would help.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Good.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: It's a weird world, isn't it?
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
Prime Minister Blair: The President: If you want to talk more about it, I will be here. (LT)

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks again, you were a real help with Ireland. (LT)

The President: It will be a great victory. You know, it will be interesting to see where the splits are between the Protestants and Catholics. I know you must have someone up there working the polls. We ought to be able to calibrate everything. The important thing is just to win the referendum. (LT)

Prime Minister Blair: The President: This thing is bigger than foreign policy. You're better at campaigning than the rest of them and have a more sophisticated insight; you should just treat it like another election and do whatever is necessary to win the election. (LT)

Prime Minister Blair: Right. Thanks Bill, all the best. Love to Hillary. (U)

The President: Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (UP)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Sean Rice, James Smith, David Higgins, Marianna Papadimitriou, Jeffrey Rathke

Dover, Delaware

The President: Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: How are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm fine. I'm great, I'm just, actually, in my local workman's club doing constituent surgery in county Durham. (U)

The President: Are you in Durham? I love the Durham Cathedral. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I just came out of a bar where the old blokes were telling me about their troubles; from that to you. (U)

The President: Good for you. I love Durham. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Did you come here? (U)

The President: I did. I liked it so well I brought Hillary back to see the cathedral and walk around the town. I took her to York and Durham on one of our trips. (U)

CONFIDENTIAL

Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(b/d)
Declassify On: 5/9/08

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
Prime Minister Blair: Oh, well. I was a choirboy at the cathedral in Durham, if you can believe that. (U)

The President: You still have that choirboy look. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: How are you doing? (U)

The President: I'm doing wonderful. I'm looking forward to being with you. I'm glad you and Major went up there together. It was good. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, I hope it helped. (U)

The President: You know it did help some. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. You know my view -- it's quite right to take the decision you did. I know Jim Steinberg was there and took the temperature of the unionist people.

The President: I think they didn't want to give Paisley and his crowd a new pretext -- "that's the guy that gave Gerry Adams a visa and broke the eggs," and all that stuff. (L)

Prime Minister Blair: That's true, but it's the right decision.

The President: I'd like that. We released a few things yesterday that we will do, and maybe we could pony it up some.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, well, I'm now taking a real grip on this thing and running it like a political campaign.

The President: So you think we ought to do some sort of joint announcement while we are there?
Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I think if we can do that, it’s all coming down to one point.

The President: And they can’t be in government if they don’t...

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: It wouldn’t just be me, but it would mess them up here in America. Almost all Irish guys here, including guys who gave them money under questionable circumstances, would bail out on them if the vote went positive and if they reneged. You’d see major abandonment of them by Irish-Americans. That’s something they can’t afford. They know they can’t. I’m not so worried anymore -- I was worried some of the IRA offshoots might take action against Gerry, but the mainstream crowd knows they can’t violate the agreement or the Americans will go berserk on them.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I think for that to be said is very important. That’s reassuring.

The President: That’s the only reason I wanted to go. I’m not under the illusion that all those Protestants love me.

Prime Minister Blair: Well, you’re absolutely right, that’s why I was keen --

The President: If we say it in Birmingham, it might still have enough echo to get there.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I agree. It certainly would. And the stuff you’ve been saying today, or someone in the White House has been saying today, about money and investment -- there’s something leading the news now about that.

The President: That’s something we put out yesterday.

Prime Minister Blair: It shows you, though, that anything you say will be carried and given prominence. What Paisley keeps doing is putting out posters saying that Gerry Adams will be Minister of Health. [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: The old guy is good. [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What will the vote be? [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

Prime Minister Blair: Sinn Fein, you mean? [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: Will three-quarters of Sinn Fein vote for the referendum? [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

Prime Minister Blair: I don't know. I suspect yes, about that.

The President: It seems like a pro forma thing. [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

Prime Minister Blair: I don't think Gerry Adams would say he'll win the vote unless he is going to win the vote. So I think it will be pretty resounding. They're prepared to lose some of their folks. Prisoners is a big issue for them.

The President: I agree with that. Yesterday, I had a group in to see me that I think is called WAVE. It's a group of victims who lost children, brothers, and parents. They were mostly, but not entirely, Protestants. A group that really wants the IRA to decommission. They’re a militant peace group. They want to deal with thousands of people in their inner and physical pain. I agree with you.

We’ve all taken our licks for Gerry, so if they want a role in the government, they have got to have some demonstration of good faith on this violence issue. These women gave me an idea yesterday. Your people could vet it for practicality. Maybe you and Bertie and I could ask for it.

They say that there is a some relatively small number of people, like 20 -- people in the police or otherwise hated by the IRA, whose remains have never been recovered. They say if there’s not immediate decommissioning, right after the vote, if you could work out the legalities so that people would not be prosecuted and the IRA could somehow direct people to the remains, so their families could give them a sanctified burial, that would have a huge psychological impact over there. I told them I’d try to help, but I’d talk to you about it. They don’t want vengeance, they just want their people back.

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, I think that would be good. I will.

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, I think that’s a great idea, we’ll look into that. E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I will do it.
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, it could give them some breathing space.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, I'll look into that, Bill.

The President: In terms of you and me making another economic statement, I will do whatever you think is best for the vote. If you want to do it in Birmingham or down in London.

Prime Minister Blair: Well, I think there are two sorts of stories from your angle: one is investments; the other is a firm message to the IRA.

The President: I'm glad to do that, too.

Prime Minister Blair: I think those two in combination would be very good.

The President: See, by the time I get there, we are only a week from the vote. So it probably is good to do it sooner rather than later so it does not seem like some desperate election move.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I'll have our guys get in touch with you. Maybe we could do two separate announcements -- a Sinn Fein one and an economic one. You organize it, and I will read whatever script you want me to read.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That's all it is. What did you make of Netanyahu? Madeleine said you were very good.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: I spent a lot of time with him in the last year. After Madeleine's first session, I thought he was a hard negotiator and not a no-negotiator. Then he called and asked Dennis to come over, and I thought that was a good sign. And now Dennis is there and his spokesman put out a statement saying he is not coming Monday. I never thought he would, but I thought he would come once I got back from Europe. I don't know yet what's going on, but I may want to call you again once I find out. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: And then it vanishes. (C)
Prime Minister Blair: It vanishes. (c)

The President: But, when I see you, we can work on it more. (c)

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, well I'll do the same. He calls me pretty regularly at the moment.

The President: You know they will. (c)

Prime Minister Blair: (c)

The President: That's exactly where the Israelis are. Eighty percent of them want that. (c)

Prime Minister Blair: (c)

The President: Okay. (c)

Prime Minister Blair: We'll stay in touch and talk when the G-8 comes. (c)

The President: I agree. You just let me know what you want. (c)

Prime Minister Blair: And, as ever, many thanks for all your help. Love to Hillary. (U)

The President: Yes. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Yes, goodbye. (U)

The President: Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair (C)

PARTICIPANTS:
The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Larry Wright, Bonnie Glick, Pat O'Shaughnessy, James Smith, Peter Huggins, Jenny McGee, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 21, 1998, 4:31 - 4:42 p.m. EDT
The Oval Office

The President: Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: How are you doing? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine, fine. I just spent the last 48 hours in Northern Ireland. (U)

The President: I hear it is turning around a little bit. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I think so. I did a complete blitz of the place, really. Every single kind of radio show, TV show, audience participation program -- sort of a two-day election campaign. It's coming around a bit. (U)

The President: I did a radio spot yesterday that they are replaying today. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: That all worked well. (U)

The President: What were the best lines? (C)

---

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

---

CONFIDENTIAL

Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(b,d)
Declassify On: 5/26/08
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: He has come along, hasn't he?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. They had a U2 concert last night that was great. Instead of having speeches, Bono told them to have a minute of silence for the victims, which was very clever.

The President: He's a smart man. I met him by accident in 1992 in Chicago, he helped me out and we've stayed in touch ever since. He's a very smart man.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, we'll have to keep our fingers crossed. Thanks for what you did last weekend; it was tremendously helpful.

The President: Good. I've just been thinking about you. I couldn't think of anything else. I did a big plug for it during a NATO expansion event. I talked about Indonesia and Northern Ireland at our NATO expansion ratification event.

Prime Minister Blair: It has played very well here.

The President: Yes, but you have to follow the locals. You've done all you can. I was glad to see in my morning intelligence that there is movement in the polls your way. I think the undecided may break your way.

Prime Minister Blair: It is possible. But it sure was the right thing to advise. I literally have spent the last 48 hours there blitzing the place, everywhere, doing everything. I stayed on longer today to visit a hospital, visit a regiment, saw the police, did a walk-about in the street. And as I got back into my car, the last person's hand I shook was (indistinct) McCartney. \(\text{\textcopyright}\)

The President: Paul McCartney? \(\text{\textcopyright}\)

Prime Minister Blair: No, Bob McCartney. \(\text{\textcopyright}\)

The President: That's great. \(\text{\textcopyright}\)

Prime Minister Blair: He started haranguing me. \(\text{\textcopyright}\)

The President: Did he really? \(\text{\textcopyright}\)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. And after I left, he accused some of the people around of being a rent-a-mob for us. This old lady turned on him and gave him a real earwigging on television. She said that she was out to vote Yes and that she was not anyone's rent-a-mob. She thought he was a disgrace. \(\text{\textcopyright}\)

The President: Sometimes, something like that can be more of a benefit than anything else. \(\text{\textcopyright}\)

Prime Minister Blair: Let's keep our fingers crossed. Put it this way: last weekend it was well that we did what we did.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Well, let me tell you also that Hillary and I had a wonderful time at Chequers. It was wonderful for us. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Oh Bill, I can't tell you how great it was to have you. And for the kids, Euan's friend went back to school the next day in a daze. I told my people that it was a real tribute to you that you were prepared to sit down and spend time with them in that way. We loved having you and had a great time, we really did. (U)

The President: Even in the darkest days back in '94 and early '95, when people thought we were finished, you can always spend time with kids and you'll never know how you'll have an impact on a young person that will change everything for them. A little extra time is the best investment you can make. Besides that, it's interesting for me. And in the work we do, you can lose contact with people younger than you. A year younger is a year younger than you. You don't even think about it, and then you turn around and find out it's been a year since you've talked to anyone who is 25. I liked it: they were delightful young men. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, I'm glad you did. For them, they are still on cloud nine. (U)

The President: You ought to be proud of yourself. You've done every damn thing you could. When the vote happens, we'll be on pins and needles over here. I guess we should know something by mid-day our time tomorrow. What kind of vote counting operation do they have over there? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Well, this is Northern Ireland. Everything is done differently. They won't start counting until Saturday morning. We will know Saturday afternoon some time. (C)

The President: They will do exit polls, won't they? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: In Northern Ireland, they've never done an exit poll. But you can never tell. If you are in the wrong part of town, you'll get completely skewed results. I think we will know by this time tomorrow evening. We will let you know, and when the result comes through, let’s just hope it is the right one. (C)

The President: Well, keep your chin up. You did the right thing. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: All right. (U)

The President: Okay, you’ve done a heck of a job turning this thing around. Take care my friend. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Alright, Bill. (U)

The President: We had a great time. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We had a great time too. Goodbye. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: David Higgins, Sean Rice, George Chastain, Joel Schrader and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 23, 1998, 1:36 - 1:46 p.m. EDT
Camp David, Maryland

The President: Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi Bill. (U)

The President: Well, congratulations. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, thank goodness. (U)

The President: You got 71 percent. Do you know what the Protestant vote was yet? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I think it was 55 percent. (U)

The President: Do you think it was as high as that? I just talked to Trimble and he was still moaning about the vote. He sounded upbeat but he said he lost in his constituency. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Overall, the most accurate poll was 55 percent. Yes, it was about five percent of the nationalist vote that went no as well, so that brought figures down a bit. (U)

The President: I just did the math and it seems the vote is 53 percent of the nationalists and 49 percent for the Unionists. Is that about right? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Roughly, possibly a little higher on the Unionist side but they reckoned that probably about five or six percent of the non-Unionist voted "No" so that brought the figure down. Of the 28 or 29 percent, that will probably bring it down to about 24 percent or 23 percent. The Unionists voted "No" 23 percent, see what I mean? It probably means just the majority of the Unionists went with the resolution.

The President: That is great though. God, it's great. I'm so happy. You must be ecstatic. You turned all those undecided voters -- almost 100 percent.

Prime Minister Blair: Again, a million thanks for what you did. It began with the interview on Sunday. From then on it began to turn. We were at one point considerably behind, although we were looking at under 60 percent. Jeffery Donaldson, who is a reasonable part of the no vote, is on TV now saying he wants to work with Trimble now.

The President: I don't think Paisley can maintain the level of support. You are going to have a significant share of those people from the 25-30 percent who think the thing ought to be given a chance to go, and that will give you three out of four, or four out of five of the Unionist voters who want to see peace.

The process will play out -- but we ought to get Gerry and his crowd to do a thing or two to get this off on a good footing. He's going to be here on Thursday for reasons unrelated to me to make some speeches. But he always seems to pop into the White House. If you want to have your guys tell us in the next three or four days what you want me to say I would appreciate it.

Prime Minister Blair: Are you going to see him yourself?

The President: I don't know. I was just calling to congratulate a few of the guys and he told me about it. I have to check my schedule on whether I see him or not but we can always have the message delivered.
The President: He ought to chunk in some weapons pretty soon, shouldn't he?

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes, let me ask you something else. We had a group touring the United States and I met with them for 10-15 minutes. I am embarrassed that I can't remember their name -- I think maybe it was Waves. It was a group who had relatives killed. I think it would help if the IRA indicated where the remains are -- without exposing them. Would that help? Is there some way to do that without exposing them to criminal liability?

Prime Minister Blair: Sure. (U)

The President: If by Wednesday somebody can call Sandy or Steinberg to let me know what kind of presentation I can make to them if they tell where remains are and that they would not be subject to criminal prosecution. That's a human touch that might have a big psychological impact -- differentiate them from the IRA.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I will get right on that.
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I’ll hammer it hard. I thought if I can advance a specific agenda -- I will work on getting a Sinn Fein person to work on decommissioning. You just let me know if I can say to him, “I want you to tell where those remains are and whoever tells won’t be subject to criminal liability.”

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, I will get someone to come back to your guys in the next few days.

The President: Have a great celebration. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I offered him a helluva deal to see if he will do it. I scraped together every penny, every pop gun I could in 72 hours. I still think there is a chance he won’t do it.

Prime Minister Blair: All right Bill, all the best. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

PARTICIPANTS: PRESIDENT CLINTON
BRITISH PRIME MINISTER BLAIR

LOCATION: EAST HAMPTON, NEW YORK

NOTE TAKERS: LARRY WRIGHT, TOM CROWELL, MATT SIBLEY, JOEL SCHRADER, JAMES SMITH, STEVE SIMON

DATE/TIME: 31 JULY 1998/1609-1642 EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Tony?

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Hi, Bill.

THE PRESIDENT: Hey, how are you?

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: I'm looking forward to my holiday. I start tomorrow. I've been reshuffling my cabinet this week.

THE PRESIDENT: You have? Who'd you change?

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Quite a lot. I'm doing fine. How are things with you?

THE PRESIDENT: Good.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: I'm really looking forward to your visit to Ireland.

THE PRESIDENT: We are trying to work out the final schedule. You and Cherie are coming up to see us, we'll be there together, right?

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: That is right. We're still trying—we came through the Drumcree situation, got through a terrible thing. The tragedy of the kids---

THE PRESIDENT: It sobered them up though, didn't it?

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Yes, it did. We still have a lot of problems.
THE PRESIDENT: Let me tell you where we are. We are having terrible trouble with Janet Reno. I think the FBI must be working on her. If you know anything about this Starr business, you know law enforcement agencies are not really under direction of the President. What she is saying is that this is coddling terrorists and making concessions to get a trial. That is a policy statement and not her call, and I can disagree. Then she raised all these questions as to whether it was legally sufficient. If you say there is no British or Scottish objection to the character or legality of the trial, it is your law; it's not our judgment to make. What I am trying to get her to do is give me an opinion saying she disagrees as a matter of policy, but Justice can find no fault from the point of view of the law. Then I think we are OK.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Right.

THE PRESIDENT: You got it. That is where I am trying to go.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR:

THE PRESIDENT:

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Bill, a couple of other things. Kosovo.

THE PRESIDENT: I agree.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR:
THE PRESIDENT: The KLA has put us in a tough position.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Yes.

THE PRESIDENT: Alright.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: One other thing, on the Middle East peace process.

THE PRESIDENT: It's very interesting.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Right. Good. OK, Bill.

THE PRESIDENT: What else do you know?

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Not much. I can't wait to go on holiday. I have got the flu this week and am a bit under the weather. Basically, I'm fine and looking forward to my holiday. But I have reshuffled my cabinet and done my spending plan. We will have an economic downturn this next year, and we have to be careful about that. I called Stan Greenberg today.

THE PRESIDENT: Yeah?

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Yes, he did some polling for us.

THE PRESIDENT: You know, the funny thing is our growth was down to 1.4 percent this quarter. It was 5.4 percent last quarter, but we lost \( \frac{1}{2} \) point on the GM strike and a full point off the Asian downturn already. We have got to do something about Japan. I am very discouraged about what Obuchi and Miyazawa have said. Miyazawa, when he was Prime Minister, he was already about 72 or 68.
THE PRESIDENT: What they are worried about is not being able to stimulate growth in their economy with tax cuts because they put these curlicues in them and people in Japan take the money and save it, because they don't think they are permanent or adequate. They think if they do all this bank restructuring, in the absence of increased demand and demand for exports, all it will do is just contract the economy and further deflation. What we have to do is try to work with them to get the necessary mix. I have been prepared to eat lower growth this year just to sop up some of their exports so they wouldn't go down, but this whole thing is going to slow what I think would be a boom in Europe and it is going to brake our expansion unless we can turn Japan around. I don't think there is enough money to move Asia there independently, without Japan coming back in Indonesia and all the other places. I just don't see it.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: What do you think we have to do?

THE PRESIDENT: What we have to do is find a way to be supportive of them without pushing, nudging them along and not humiliating them so they don't hunker down and turn inward. It's a funny little balance we have to strike but we need a coherent strategy. But if I get an opening I may press him and maybe I'll call you and we can do something. We have to get the Europeans involved. What's going on in Germany? Schroeder is going to win isn't he?

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: I think so.

THE PRESIDENT: Is Stan polling for Schroeder?

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: I think he's doing some work along those lines.

THE PRESIDENT: When I was there before I didn't see any — I think Kohl is where Churchill was at the end of World War II: the people are grateful but ready for a change.
THE PRESIDENT: How long has Helmut been in, 16 years? That's a hell of a long time.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: That's right.

THE PRESIDENT: Very clever.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Me, too.

THE PRESIDENT: If the vote is close enough, he should do that. I still think Netanyahu would have been better off doing that.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: You ought to tell him what I told you.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: I agree with you. Just today we had the announcement of job losses here as a result of Asia. It's the first time it's been brought home.

THE PRESIDENT: I am really very concerned about it. The first place it hit us was in agriculture. We export about half our grain and about 40 percent goes to Asia and we are down 30 percent this year.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Gee. Thirty percent.

THE PRESIDENT: And we can't get new markets because of bumper crops and the climate change caused by El Nino. I think with 1.4 percent growth, unemployment will go up a little. I just don't see any set of scenarios where we do better unless we get Japan turned around. I would guess that you're seeing increased flows to Latin America like we are. Thank God for Latin America, they are doing quite well.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Absolutely right.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: I hope not.
THE PRESIDENT: Anyway, I think our first order of business should be to deal with the Japanese government. The Chinese are hanging in there and have not devalued, but their target was revised downward. I feel they will hang in there several more months. There is a limit to the pounding they can take, expectations have been raised. You can see, it is so palpable, they are proud as hell they have stayed strong and have not had to devalue. But at some point, they'll have a hard time hanging on. I think the quicker we could have some sort of EU-US initiative — This was this huge real estate boom, but the Japanese stock market lost 50 percent of its value in the last five years. We're just not getting any reinvestment in growth. The way they have done all tax changes to date, people are saving the money, and they're spending all this money on a world-class big infrastructure that hasn't done anything. I know they are frustrated because, basically, they have taken a whole series of half-measures and it has not helped them. They have dragged Asia down.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

THE PRESIDENT: Talk to Prodi. They've been very good at working with us, by the way. Bob Rubin sent all our best people over there, but their political mechanism is inadequate.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

THE PRESIDENT: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)]

THE PRESIDENT: Yeah, the reform movement had a false birth under Hosokawa. Did you ever meet him?

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: No.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

THE PRESIDENT: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)]

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Yes, and maybe not the last. Jospin was here last week. He really loved his time in Washington.

THE PRESIDENT: Hillary and I love him and love his wife.
THE PRESIDENT: Well, that’s good. France and Brazil are two countries that have permanent governments, for good or bad, but have inbred an anti-Americanism that colors the atmosphere and the left in France had a lot of that, as well as the Gaullist crowd, but I always admired the guy so much from a distance. You had a big influence on him, too.

THE PRESIDENT: I will follow up on Kosovo and get you a briefing on the Middle East. It’s a little more ambiguous than the last time we talked. Netanyahu has moved on some issues and there is a chance we can break through. I didn’t think he was bargaining in good faith, but now I have seen some change and we might have a shot at it. We’ll work out Irish schedule and get the Attorney General to sign off on the legal adequacy as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Again Bill, 101 percent support.

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you, I appreciate it, goodbye.

PRIME MINISTER BLAIR: Goodbye.
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Tony Campanella, Robert Ford, Cindy Lawrence, Sean Tarver, Matthew Sibley

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: August 6, 1998, 4:46 p.m. - 5:06 p.m. EDT
Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)
The President: How are you doing? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: I’m fine, enjoying my holiday. (U)
The President: Are you in Tuscany? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Yes. (U)
The President: God I’m jealous. Have you been to Sienna? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: We’re going there next week. (U)
The President: Oh, that is a great place. Isn’t that a beautiful little town? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Yes, it is. (U)
The President: When I was there about ten years ago, I ate at a four star restaurant. I can’t remember its name, but it had a sign of a fish, like a peace symbol, or something. I had a three-hour lunch there and they had to carry me out. (U)

CONFIDENTIAL
Reason: 1.5(d)
Declassify On: 8/07/08
Prime Minister Blair: It’s a good place to be carried out from. Are you on holiday? (U)

The President: The House is here for another month, one more day actually and so we are all working here. I am going to go on holiday in ten or eleven days. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Weren’t you up with Steven Spielberg? (U)

The President: I spent the weekend up in Long Island with him. We talked about you. He and Tom Hanks came here last month and showed me their movie “Saving Private Ryan,” about Normandy, before it was in the theater. It’s an enormous film, really good. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: So you’re back in your office. (U)

The President: Yes, I’m sitting here in my office. It’s a beautiful day outside. I’m concerned about the Japanese situation, really worried. But that is not why I called. Gerhard Schroeder was here yesterday and we had a long talk. He’s apparently still leading the polls by a solid 5-8 points. You think he is going to win don’t you? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: He just thinks it’s time for a change? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. You can never tell for sure. (C)

The President: Well, you know, it’s the second time we’ve met; it was much more relaxed this time. The first time was in Germany and I was on a campaign swing for Kohl, so you can imagine, but we had a good talk.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
The President: The longer you hang around this business, it becomes apparent that very few people make it this far by accident. They don’t just give these jobs away. [U]

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, I think that’s true. (U)

The President: I called you to talk about Kosovo. It is getting worse. The headlines show that, but Milosevic is going for a military solution. Serb security forces are not only suppressing Albanian militants, but are also engaging in a systematic campaign against the civilian population. I think we are getting closer to a major humanitarian disaster. [U]

Milosevic has a sense of doing this under the threshold for NATO military response because he believes that NATO will respond only with a UN resolution, but Russia guarantees to block it. My view is, at a minimum, we need to make him think again. We need to finalize planning that we started, identify forces and think about some sort of ultimatum to get him to stop the offensive and restore autonomy for Kosovo. [U]

I believe we ought to make it clear that, while we would like to get UN authority, we can do it without it. I know you differ here, and Albright talked to Cook about asking the UN Security Council for the necessary authority. [U]

Let me tell you we are headed to a collision on Kosovo and what is going on in Russia. I talk to Bob Rubin about every day. I am still quite concerned about their economy and about the stability of the Yeltsin government. His health is deteriorating and a lot of noise is being made about controls on freedoms to get order in society. [U]
What I'm afraid of is, if things get worse in Kosovo, a lot of civilians will be dying and others turning into refugees. If we put Yeltsin into this box, he will be forced to abstain because it is so bad and would really hurt him at home politically with the economy the way it is, or he can keep with Primakov and veto it and run the risk of alienating the rest of the world at the very time he needs the most support from the international community. While it is better to have UN support, I am very worried about bringing this to a vote right now. (C)

Milosevic thinks he has a free hand. I talked to you and John Major and I understand you have different system to decide legal authority there. One thing I had our guys do -- there is a basis: there have been a number of cross-border incursions and threats to international observers, which could be a trigger for self-defense. Also, there is Milosevic's record of threat to international peace and security and then the humanitarian atrocities. I think we could construct a legal case, but if I can't convince you about it, we don't have a chance with Chirac and Kohl. (C)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me ask you this then. Shouldn't we try to get Chirac and Kohl to sign off on ultimatums we would give Milosevic? Word of planning would be somewhat helpful. Convince Chirac and Kohl that a UN resolution is not legally necessary. I know how Chirac is on this, but it will hurt Yeltsin if we put him in a position of having to sign off or block now. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We can nose around it. His economic problems are horrible and his internal political problems are awful. I'm very worried about this. Yeltsin was going to go on vacation in August, but then he had to come early, even though his health needs the rest. I am going over there and meet with him for a few days in September, but I'm very worried about this.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I don't know, we have to work on that. We have to work through another option, apart from a Security Council resolution. They would have to raise holy hell, but, in the end, if we handle it in the right way, it would be the best of three bad alternatives. Better than forcing them to veto it. Better than forcing him to eat it. My problem is I am afraid what happens if we let it deteriorate more. There is a rumor, news story, of 500 people in a mass grave. It may not be true, but the other side is trying to force us in, too. We have all those problems you and I discussed before. People want us to be their air force to get independence. But I think the near term problem is we went through all this with the Bosnian civil war and I don't want to replay it with another Muslim population.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, that is exactly what's doing it and Primakov gave it to him.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I'm going to call Helmut first and nail him down. Kinkel's been aware of where the French are. Given the impact on their election, but might help him electorally. But basically it is a domestic election, so my guess is no effect.
The President: We will nose around some more. They may decide to shape this and go along with us, but right now I don't see it. [LET]

Prime Minister Blair: [LET]

The President: Maybe they will want to try to go along with us on a resolution, but I doubt it. Let me mention a couple of other things. The Security Council had a discussion about Iraq today with Kofi. I think we have to play a measured game here. I think this is a reaction by Iraq to the fact the IAEA says they couldn't recommend ending the inspection regime and going to monitoring on the nuclear issue. [LET]

This was a serious report that we had nothing to do with, on very specific issues. It could be they simply overacted, but my instinct right now is to not come out with a bellicose reaction at this point. We ought to be relaxed and work with the Secretary General and focus on inspection requirements. We will just say that we will postpone sanctions reviews until Iraq achieves compliance. [LET]

Butler was very upfront. I think the Iraqis may have been showing a little leg about it. About every six months they try to provoke us with their rhetoric, but they may come back. With all these other problems in the world we should give Kofi a chance to work through this. If not, then we can say to hell with them and we leave the sanctions on indefinitely. [LET]

Prime Minister Blair: What about these reviews? [LET]

The President: I think they overread the IAEA refusal to recommend ending the inspection regime and going to monitoring on nuclear. The IAEA said they had just a few more things to do here. It would have been reviewed in August for monitoring in October but, for whatever reason, they reacted the way they did. Now is not the time for us to overact. They probably hope we will do that and spend a lot of money moving the fleet back in, but I don't want to do that right now. We'll monitor it closely, but, on the other hand, don't let them think they can wish this away. [LET]
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I think we might, but hopefully we’ll have our course on Kosovo by then. Two other things.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

I talked to you about Lockerbie. I have the decision memo in front of me and I will work through it as quickly as I can and get back to you on that.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: You have more riding on it than I do. The Scottish regime has enough restrictions as it is. Go back to your holiday, tell Cheri I said hi, have a wonderful time, and drink a glass of wine for me tonight.

Prime Minister Blair: All the best to you. (U)

The President: Thanks. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We are thinking of you. (U)

The President: We’re doing fine. Thank you. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks Bill. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Tony Blair

Notetakers: David Higgins, Tony Campanella, George Chastain, Jenny McGee, Chris Jansen and Ralph Sigler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: August 16, 1998, 7:51-8:04 p.m. EDT
The Residence

The President: Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Tony. Well, I just called to tell you I was thinking about you. You've had a miserable day. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, it's pretty grim. (U)

The President: What the hell happened? Who did it? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Do you believe the person who gave the warning made a mistake or did it deliberately? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: The truth is, we don't know. (U)

The President: Do you still want me to come? (U)

CONFIDENTIAL

Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(b,d)
Declassify On: 8/1/2008
Prime Minister Blair: ( )

The President: It is probably more important now than before. You need to decide as time goes by if we need to visit the site and make a stop. ( )

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely. I've visited some of the victims and families tonight. It was pretty harrowing. ( )

The President: Pretty tough, isn't it? ( )

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, it's an awful feeling -- completely helpless. ( )

The President: I just had to sit with all those people, with their families, who got murdered in Africa. There's nothing you can say, but it matters to them to know the leader of their country came to see them, so you did a good thing. Even if you felt like you have five thumbs. ( )

Prime Minister Blair: ( )

The President: Can Gerry Adams help you get these people? ( )

Prime Minister Blair: ( )

The President: Do you think they will? They could do more good in less time by helping you get these guys. ( )

Prime Minister Blair: ( )

The President: Did they condemn it at all? ( )

Prime Minister Blair: ( )

The President: Not just Gerry Adams, but did the IRA condemn it? What do you want them to say? ( )

Prime Minister Blair: ( )
The President: If who proposes?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: And they will agree? Both will agree? You would like the IRA to say, look, what happened is a part of the past, it’s all over, and if the chief constables can agree on new security measures, they will support them? I’ll see what I can do.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I think this is an opportunity for him, too.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I’ve got it. I will get on this right away. I guess I’ll have to wait until morning to call them, but I’ll be up late tonight.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Okay.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Ninety people, 15 hardcore. Do they have a name?

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: All right I'll get on this.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Okay, got it.

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, how are you?

The President: I've been up to my ass in this Africa bombing, because there's a lot more than meets the eye on what happened in Africa. If we were on a secure line, I could tell you more. But I'll see what I can do. I'll put Sandy on this tomorrow. I'll make some calls tomorrow.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Damn right.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: If Sinn Fein really forms an alliance with the Unionists, that leaves the other group out. You'll have a localized version of what's happened around the world, where terrorists are not associated with or funded by governments. In this case, what you've got is a cell.

I don't know who's giving them money, but we're going to increasingly have to deal with terrorists with no ties to any nation-state, including Iran, if the precedent there keeps on track. But in the case of a lot of Middle East and African countries, we could be dealing with these people, like in those old James Bond movies with SPECTRE and Dr. No. We're going to have a twenty-first century version of those.

We're already dealing with drug cartels. The Colombian Army has been defeated in battle four times in the last year with narco-dealers. They do not have the physical capacity to extract these people. They don't engage in terrorism; they just kill people who get in the way of people making money. If you can get somebody worth about 200 or 300 million bucks to operate this and earn enough money per year through stock earnings and interest accounts, and if you’re prepared to spend it building an international network.

Some of these guys earn enough money in terrorism and think, compared to whatever they get paid, it’s more than they were making before. My worry is for all these IRA offshoots, isolated cells who were kept apart and were kept isolated from centralized control, that psychologically they may not be able to handle it. If what their real prospect is that they could lay down their arms and not go to jail and take low-paying jobs instead of terrorism, a lot of them may not be able to psychologically handle going to work everyday and carrying a lunchbox.

What kind of psychological message are you sending to them? What kind of economic message? Have you had someone working on getting them college payments or job help? My worry is these people will think, “I cannot imagine leading this deadly dull life.” I may be wrong, but I think these people personally cannot imagine living in a different way. If you’re only dealing with 15 killers and 75 others in a support system, what thought can you give to offering them an interesting life? But I’m all into dull these days. I’m all for a little more dull. This really is a problem, Tony.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Absolutely, and infused with meaning. You ought to have a really smart person think about the psychological and economic dynamics about how they would spend their days, and do a concerted effort on persuading them how else they could spend their days. It may be B.S., but I think it’s part of the problem and is worth thinking about. You’ve got a lot of brilliant people over there that could figure out a psychological campaign to deal with them specifically. You don’t have much to lose and you might have some benefit from it. I will do these things you asked. I’m really sorry, Tony. I’m so sorry this happened. You know, I was afraid this would happen before the vote. I was afraid they might try to kill Gerry or David.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: If you could bust these guys in a hurry, even pick up just one or a couple of these guys. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: We will try to do that. (C)

The President: Okay, I'll get on this. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Best of luck to you, too. Goodbye. (U)

The President: Thanks, man. Goodbye. (U)

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: David Higgins, Lyle Harrison, Cindy Lawrence, Liz Rogers, Jim Smith and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: August 20, 1998, 4:52 - 4:59 p.m. EDT
Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hello, Bill. (U)

The President: Hi, Tony. I am sorry the other phone was not working. Thank you for your statement. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Not at all. It is important it is done. (U)

The President: Yes. We thought they were having a big meeting there today, but we won't know for sure for a few hours. This place we hit is maybe the biggest terrorist camp in the world, with 500-600 people there at a time. We thought we had good intelligence that the leaders planned to meet there, but unfortunately it was reported in the international press; there was no hint in our press of any consideration of an attack.

There was a report yesterday of rumors, and more than rumors, that we were concerned that they planned to attack a third embassy. We also took down one of their cells in the Balkans, so they are annoyed at us anyway. I'm sure you know this guy signed a Fatwa and said that he would kill thousands of our people.
I am very grateful for your statement.

Prime Minister Blair: Not at all. So, what has actually happened tonight?

The President:

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah.

The President: So that is where we are. We don't know what we got in Afghanistan, but in the worst case we took out his training facility. So we have to hope for the best, but even in the worst case, it was worth doing.
The President: Yes. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Let me tell you, I need to speak to the Pakistani Prime Minister before I go on TV, but I need to call you next week to talk to you about Ireland before I come. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: All right, my friend. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: All the very best to you. Goodbye. (U)

The President: Goodbye.

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Bonnie Glick, Joel Schrader, Liz Rogers, Jenny McGee, Jim Smith and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: August 27, 1998, 4:32 - 4:54 p.m. EDT
Martha's Vineyard, Massachusetts

The President: Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Hi. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: How are things? (U)

The President: Oh, fine. I just interrupted my vacation a little bit today. I went into Massachusetts and did an event. It was great. I got to work a line and speak to a cheering crowd. It wasn't something organized. It was just put together in two days. There were thousands. It was amazing. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Good, I'm pleased. (U)

The President: This is my best state. You know, if I'd been in Wyoming, they probably would have been shooting at me. You never can tell. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Good, I'm pleased about that. I'm sorry you had all this stuff with the hurricane, too. (U)

The President: That's all right. It could have been a hell of a lot worse. (U)

CONFIDENTIAL
Reason: 1.5(b,d)
Declassify On: 8/28/06
Prime Minister Blair: I'm really sorry to interrupt your holiday. (U)

The President: Go ahead. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I just wanted to raise a couple of things. The first is Ireland. I know that my people have talked to your people today.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: I'll do it. When do you want me to call him? Today, tomorrow, as quickly as I can? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I think so, Bill. (C)

The President: What's your view of the timetable? What's your preferred timetable where all the leaders meet face-to-face? (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That would be great. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me ask you this. What's the date that Gerry does the actual decommissioning? When does the IRA actually have to turn some guns over? A week after that? (C)
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Let me ask, what kind of understanding are you trying to reach on the volume of weapons and type of ammunition?

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: So it’s something de Chastelain can say is substantial and must be significant. I got it. I’ll call him.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill, that would be fantastic.

The President: Now, what the hell do you think is going on over in Russia? I’ve got Strobe Talbott, my Deputy Secretary of State, over there in Russia. We’re watching it closely. Our stock market took a big hit with this rumor that he would resign. Yeltsin’s in the dacha, Chernomyrdin’s working on confirmation. There are rumors that Yeltsin would resign once Chernomyrdin is confirmed. I don’t know, but I know this: They are absolutely insistent that I come. I can’t initiate my not going. It’s kind of a mess. That could sink their economy or politics sure enough.

Their economy is still rapidly deteriorating. The Central Bank is still under pressure to inject liquidity into the banking sector. The problem is when they do, the banks turn around and take the money out of the country, and so there’s no control over that money. There’s no clear economic policy, and I think they’ve got this new Trilateral Duma Commission, talking about renationalizing industries and price controls.

What I think they have to do is bite the bullet and pass a decent regulatory system and tax system and a decent bank and a decent social welfare system. I think there’s alienation among the people because social welfare has always been a fraud in Russia. The Economist a couple of weeks ago had a great little piece on the missing social agenda. The charities are taking over a lot of it, but the reason ordinary people felt so totally insecure was they really don't think there's any social safety net.

I think it's worth going over to try to work through this. We've got to reassert our commitment and reassert the importance of the weapons agreements we can still make, but tell them they've still got to embrace democracy and free markets and have tough Russian solutions to tough Russian problems.

You can make money out of that under any circumstances, even when it's screwed up, and God knows, it was screwed up. It's a cash cow.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: These social pressures, nationalism, retrograde socialism, were present in Poland, Hungary, and to a lesser extent, the Czech Republic. For all kinds of reasons, they were able to make the transition with a lot less fallout. Russia is a big country that could basically suck in a lot of stuff from Warsaw Pact nations. I am appalled to the extent there are not the functioning intermediary institutions without which neither a democracy nor market economy can succeed. I'm quite concerned now that a working majority of the populace is for the suspension of some democratic freedom just to have a strong leader who'll get the damn show on the road again and make the trains run on time. They're disappointed in the executive but also disappointed in the Duma going too much the other way.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: If you think about it, it's quite interesting how many places in the world there are -- including in your discussion with me -- where, at least to outsiders, the economic answer or the political answer seems clear. And if you could just get over the hard knock of doing it, it'll be better on the other side, but the political system is unable to cross the hurdle. Both of us have been rather fortunate that our political systems are still functioning well enough to do what has to be done.

The biggest economic tragedy is not Russia, but Japan. Even with their massive infrastructure and understanding of the modern economy, they still can't put together the political decisions that are manifestly in their interest. I don't know if Europe is on the upsurge of growth. There's still some internal growth that could be generated by France and Germany by internal changes.

I don't know how much longer we can sustain our growth without some more growth in Japan. We're absorbing 30 percent of Chinese exports now, 50 percent more than our world GDP share, and there's a huge increase in Japanese exports. They can't buy our imports, and the Chinese can take a lot more but they have certain controls. I'm worried that if we have three quarters rather than one quarter of economic slowdown, there'll be an increase in the trade deficit. We'll see a whole round of protectionist pressure build up again, which will affect Europe, if only indirectly.

I think the Japanese issue is still the biggest economic issue. The Russia issue is a political issue. If they get a dictatorial leader, they'll be much harder to deal with on Kosovo and other things, I'm afraid. I think it's worth my going over there. I'll meet with the Duma leaders from other parties and have a little no-BS conversation about what's going on here and hopefully reduce a little of their paranoia about America and the West. It may not be a conventional success, but I'll go as long as they want me to come -- unless Yeltsin resigns in the next two days -- if nothing else but to talk to Chernomyrdin, who is physically and mentally quite alert and strong, personally.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What I'm worried about with Yeltsin is -- in my last conversation I had with him, he said all the right things, even on the things we disagree on, he said all the right things, at least from his point of view, but he really seemed profoundly tired in a way I had never heard him before. I am afraid his energy, his will to go on may be sapped.
Prime Minister Blair: Yeah, I'm afraid so.

The President: But there's nothing I can do about it.

Prime Minister Blair: Hello? Hello? Bill? (U)

The President: Yeah, I can barely hear you. It sounds like four other people are having a conversation on the same line. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: You were saying? (U)

The President: No, that's it. Look, if I find out anything about Russia in the next few days before I come, I'll call you.

Prime Minister Blair: I got it. And I'll get to work on it. Honestly, I think politically for him, for Gerry, it might be easier for him to do the decommissioning if it comes about with me being there. There's a perception in Northern Ireland, and I've tried not to do this, but there's a perception that I've tilted more toward him than Trimble. In that case, it could be an advantage and could make it a little easier, if it all goes around this issue. [C]

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Let me get on it, and I'll give you a report.

Prime Minister Blair: All right, Bill. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Tony Campanella, Doug Bayley, Liz Rogers, Cindy Lawrence and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: August 30, 1998, 2:29 - 2:38 p.m. EDT
The Oval Office

The President: Hello. Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. How are you? I'm up at Balmoral with the Queen. (U)

The President: Well, good. Lucky for you. Is it still light? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It is a beautiful evening. How are you doing? (U)

The President: I bet it is. I'm doing fine, working. I just got off the phone with Kohl on Russia. How are we doing on Ireland? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Many, many thanks indeed for speaking with Gerry Adams. Where we are?

The President: That's what he told me. (U)
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Well, you know do you think we can get them to meet next week, while I am there?

Prime Minister Blair: It's possible you know. Not impossible.

The President: It would be huge and help me enormously here with what I am dealing with.

Prime Minister Blair: You are here on Thursday?

The President: They could obviously do it in Belfast, or they could go to Omagh with us. It would be profoundly symbolic.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: I’m not asking you to promise. I had a tough talk with Gerry Adams. It was probably worth doing even though he didn’t say yes on five and six. "

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: When I see you, I really hope we have some time to talk about Russia and Kosovo too. "

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I agree with that. The first thing we have to do is get him confirmed, and

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)  It is really frustrating; all the money that went in has gone back out -- $7.5 billion. I’ll see what I can do over there and work like hell to influence the Duma people. Keep your fingers crossed. When I see you we’ll get a chance to talk about it. I can’t wait to see you. "

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, likewise. "

The President: See you soon. Goodbye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair

PARTICIPANTS: The President
              Prime Minister Blair
              Notetakers: Cindy Lawrence, Robin Rickard, Matt Sibley, Joel Schrader, James Smith, Don Bandler and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: September 11, 1998, 4:33 p.m.-4:58 p.m. EDT
              Oval Office

The President: Tony. How are you doing? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm fine. I'm fine. How are things? (U)

The President: We're doing pretty good here. That's my gut, anyway. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I saw you on television; I thought you were pretty good, actually. (U)

The President: This morning? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. (U)

The President: Yes, it was pretty good. It's coming together. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I think that is right really. Anyway, we're thinking of you. (U)

The President: Thanks. What's up? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Two things. I wanted to update you on the Northern Ireland situation. (U)
The President: Tell me where we are.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: In theory that is what they agreed to. Are they willing to do any kind of schedule?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What is the main Sinn Fein argument against it?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: The IRA never disarmed and it can't look like the Unionists forcing them to do so?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Well, they made a deal, though.

Prime Minister Blair:
The fact is there is a very good feeling in Northern Ireland right now. Your visit went very well.

The President: It was wonderful.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree with that. Everybody is so up. The trip to the Irish Republic was unbelievable. There were 50,000 in Limerick. Bertie is in a strong position to weigh in with Sinn Fein.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me ask you something. I've been thinking about all the possible permutations and angles.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I understand why the schedule is not enough. Then he is giving them something concrete that he can't take back and he is getting something symbolic.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Let me ask, I understand you announced that you will leave your army in the barracks while your police do the actual patrols. Are they putting any pressure on you to make a symbolic withdrawal of British forces?

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: Would that matter to Gerry? Jim Steinberg here doesn't think you could work a deal with him. I tried to get him to explain to me what the problem was.

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: This is a big hang-up and they are not ready to cross the psychological divide. I understand and sympathize with them; I am kind of an expert in that. But they did make a deal. I wonder, it seems to me the biggest barrier was they have talked themselves into this position that is linguistically accurate, but politically unrealistic.

The deal said they would get in the Executive branch when they get the votes, and they would decommission in two years. They never disarmed, but here they would be disarmed to get something they are legally entitled to anyway. What if we could get the schedule out and there was a symbolic decommissioning, for something outside the agreement, so they would not look like they were coerced by the Unionists?

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: Do you want me to raise this with him in a what-if way? I won't tell him I talked to you about this.
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Are there any other sort of permutations or circumstances that might permit them to do it?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: When I talked to Bertie he thought he could take those guys down that did the Omagh bombing. I thought it would be sooner. I had the impression it was imminent when I left Ireland.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Of course they do.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: An actual arrest, even if it only just one person -- you’ve got 29 dead people there. It would be a real coup for Trimble.

That is the argument you could make.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Do you want me to raise that with him?
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I'll get on it.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree. The chemistry is a lot better than what I thought. We coincidentally have a big Irish celebration here in about 30 minutes. They are applauding George Mitchell. I might nose around with some of the Sinn Fein supporters to see what I can do to nudge them a bit. These Americans still have a little bit of influence because they have money.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let's explore this idea -- arrests -- plus a schedule.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I bet you anything, if you explain that the arms thing is not a big deal because they have a stash, and they are easily replaced. Whereas, the arrest of people who murdered 29 folks in a country that is so small would be a tangible act of good faith. I think disbanding the Real IRA was an act of good faith, but I am trying to work Trimble's politics around Gerry's.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree. From Trimble's point of view, he is not asking for much. He is asking for something symbolic in return for something tangible. From Adams point of view, it is not such a good deal since he gets a year and a half in return for something he has a legal right to right now. Either you have to get Trimble to change by getting a different good deal, or get Adams to change. Jim Steinberg says we tried that latter course, and he didn't seem very excited about it. It might be worth going back to Adams and Bertie to see if they can't figure out how to identify who has done this.

Just because they disbanded, I don't think it is enough for those 29 people, that beautiful teenaged girl who was blinded, and the other people. They need to arrest somebody anyway. Unless whoever did this left the country, but Bertie didn’t think that was the case. Let us raise this with Sinn Fein, and I will have Jim Steinberg nose around with three to four of the most influential here today.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me say a word about Russia. The good news is they have a government, I am glad that you are hosting this G-7 meeting and Russia will be able to be part of it. It think it would be a good idea to talk to them practically about the lessons learned from other countries with financial problems. I am going to call Yeltsin now that he has Primakov in place. The fundamental problem was they privatized property without putting in place the building blocks and that created a vacuum. All the oligarchs and mafia are shipping money out of the country. They want to come back with a solution that they can put old Humpty Dumpty back together again and they can’t do that.

On the other hand, it is equally true that there are international dimensions here. We have to rethink the IMF deal. It seems to me that we need to develop some sort of pro-growth strategy for the rest of the world. You have 40 percent of the world in recession now. In the end, you and I can’t keep our growth going. I just want you to do anything you can to walk the Russians through this and maybe cut them a little slack on some of these macro issues, but hey, you have to build a skeleton before you can have the body of an economic power. You might want to call Yeltsin after this meeting.

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah.

The President: But, I think we just have to get their attention on what they have to do, before it ever gets better there. We need to look at it in the context of a larger settlement. We have even considered paying for their space program for a year so their scientists don’t go build rockets for someone else. The scientists on the board of the space program have not been paid for six months. It is unbelievable. I know you have more than you can say grace over, but to whatever extent you can tone up that G-7 meeting and to call Yeltsin or Primakov when it is over.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I am going to give a speech in New York on Monday on the general outline of what we see. Deputy Finance Ministers in the G-21 have been working for over a year. We have the basis for some work. Maybe I can talk to you when you get here on the 21st. My instinct is that the G-7 should call for them to at least present recommendations to us and to get heads of state together and show some leg here. Bob Rubin continually cautions me that we don't want to unrealistically raise expectations if we don't know where we are going.

The fundamental difficulty is that you can't get out of the fact that these countries have to do certain things. On the one hand, there is incredible fluidity in capital movements, while on the other hand there is a pro-growth strategy. If they are not willing to have the infrastructure, all this pro-growth strategy won't matter. If we get them juiced up again, the money will flow out and be in somebody's Swiss bank account. It's a tough knot to untie. The IMF tried to modify their approach in Indonesia, but it doesn't necessarily work in the context of massive, breathtakingly rapid capital flow.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I've reviewed what the G-21 people are working on. A lot of it is technical and arcane, but in aggregate it's pretty good stuff. It can make a big difference. It will remain arcane and complex and dense to the world as long as it is operating at the level of deputy finance ministers. My instinct is maybe we ought to talk next week before you come to New York and we do this conference, because maybe while we are there we can make decisions and some scenario to elevate the visibility of this and to get world leaders involved.

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: It might help. Cardoso is cratering and is facing reelection in October. I am just sick about that. I think he will get reelected, but it will be tough. Let me do the Irish thing and you can chew on all of this. I think you should call Yeltsin after the meeting. Let's try to talk again on this.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. (U)

The President: Thanks again. Hillary and I had a wonderful time. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Good. All the best. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bye, bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Tony Blair

Notetakers: Mariana Papadimitriou, Doug Bayley, Matt Sibley, Joe Schrader and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: October 6, 1998, 9:44 - 10:05 a.m. EST
Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hello Bill. (U)

The President: Hey Tony how are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm fine. I'm in China. (U)

The President: Are you having a good time? Is it hot there? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It was until we got here, but we brought some British weather with us. (U)

The President: I just wanted to check in with you on Kosovo. Yeltsin called me yesterday, as he called you, to say Milosevic got the OSCE to come in and now everything is going to be all right. I think it would be a real mistake for us to take the pressure off now. Kofi's report is going to be filed today and it is a graphic account of Milosevic's continued defiance of the UN and the International Community. (U)

I believe we have to maintain momentum and keep building a consensus for the NATO decision to authorize force. Dick Holbrooke is there and is still meeting either in Belgrade or Pristina. Fighting has been in a lull for the past few days,

CONFIDENTIAL
Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(b,d)
Declassify On: 10/07/08
but Milosevic hasn’t withdrawn or agreed to measures that would make the end of hostilities verifiable or durable. (C)

You know I would like to find some way to get the Russians on board. We can’t force Yeltsin into a veto. We have got to tell Yeltsin, look, if you are right and we are wrong then Milosevic will be in full compliance. If he lied to you one more time, then we are going to do it. This is an issue that to me seems to be a real mistake to let pressure up now. (C)

Let me mention one other thing.

That may be necessary but it is a terrible time for me to deal with it with this Congress of mine. They are always willing to give more money to the military and then do not want to do anything with it. There is a really strong block in the Republican party that wants to do that and I have worked to get them to continue to support SFOR in Bosnia. And we really do have a readiness problem. (C)

Keep in mind this is the same group that took eight months to approve IMF funding. If we have to do this publicly, it will be a real problem for me. I don’t want to do anything to undermine my ability or encourage them to try some eleventh hour measure to stop these air strikes. They will be gone in a week. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I totally understand that Bill. On the first point I am in complete agreement.
The President: I completely agree with that. I am just saying injecting that now into the public debate would be a problem.

Prime Minister Blair: Bloody bright, isn't he?

The President: Yes, he is great.

Prime Minister Blair: I will tell him today when I go to talk to him. How are we going to go on this now Bill.

The President: I hope we can get support for the G7 plan. The G7 met after we talked last time to endorse the idea of keeping the crisis from spreading to Latin America. We will have IMF funding by the end of next week and can proceed with the emergency plan.

Gordon said what I have been saying all along. We have got to modify the Bretton Woods convention and implement some sort of bank regulatory system that has the effect of doing what bank regulation does in each of our countries and the stock market regulatory systems do, so that we can control the boom and bust cycles on an international scale. Bretton Woods dealt with how to have sufficient money to deal with trade and services but didn’t anticipate independent financial forces, which leveraged financial instruments, and that trading in money itself would have an effect on the global economy.

Bretton Woods assumed 50 years ago that no matter what, the issue would be to find enough money to facilitate trade and investment -- not that money flows themselves would become a greater force of nature in the global economy. We have got to find a way to set up systems to replicate national systems that prevent depressions by limiting boom and bust cycles. There are two ways to do it. You can do it outright or have some sort of oversight mechanism that requires countries to make those changes.

I think that is where we are going, but we still have to decide. I tried last night, but had a little wrinkle. I tried to get this group of 22 -- I counted 25 around the table -- to accelerate the reporting process. The working group of the deputy finance ministers reports in December/January after which we would have a meeting of world leaders.

I think we can do one of two things. If you and Prodi and I want to have a meeting earlier than that they can accelerate the reporting process, which we can meet and validate. Or the alternative, based on this meeting, we could have a larger meeting, or a G7 meeting, and endorse this central idea, that is precisely

There is another wrinkle. Europe is doing quite well and the forecast is for growth. The big three countries in Europe are going to do well also.

I didn’t want to confuse people and scare them about a worldwide recession, but I wanted to say that Europe has a bigger stake in Latin America than the United States does right now. We have seen bigger credit strictures and a tightening of credit here because of so many bad loans in the global economy. Regulators are cutting off good credit risks because of problems our banks are having elsewhere.
I can understand it, but I did not place a lot of stock in E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)But they did not disagree with the central idea that was succinctly put in Gordon’s comments, which is what we have all been trying to say. I think there is still a chance we can do something more quickly if we want. The big front line test now is what happens to Brazil. Cardoso won the election but he has a lot of people in the run-off elections, three weeks from Sunday, or whenever. They have less than $40 billion in cash reserves now, and I don’t think he can stall for three weeks without saying what his reform proposal is. If Brazil goes south we are all going to suck eggs big time.

I want to go give my speech today -- it is consistent with what you and Gordon said -- and then see what the status of the group is. Then, we’ll see if we should have the G7 or some other group meeting where everybody gets together and endorses the idea. The developing countries were there and not one spoke against it. The Thais were there and they’re doing quite well. They seem to be in harness on interim measures and suffering contractions because of it.

They need a dramatic increase in World Bank investment to build a social safety net, but the problem is financial institutions are running short of money, not just the IMF. The World Bank is worried about having so many bad investments out and that its credit rating will go down. The longer we wait to get consensus, the worse it will be. We can have consensus in the long term. I don’t know enough yet, but my instinct is to move sooner rather than later. But I need to let today pass to see where we are and get back to you. You should ask the Chinese where they stand. They have been champs in not devaluing their currency. They have taken some hits for it, but the benefits outweigh the burden. Anyway, I wanted to say that’s where we are. In 48 hours we will be in a place to decide whether to get the leaders together sooner rather than later. I am for it but my Treasury department is against it.
The President: Do you think we will get any grief for not having the Russians there? (c)

Prime Minister Blair: (c)

The President: But they would probably go along? (c)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree. That is why I want to go in there today and be very aggressive. If Europe and Japan will support this and we have a united G7 front, we will be in pretty good shape. (d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: They might like it if we could put outside pressure on them without appearing to. That would be the best of all possible worlds. I need to go over now and give a talk. I will be back to you within 48 hours to let you know where we go from here. How long are you going to be in China? (c)
Prime Minister Blair: A few days here and then in Hong Kong.

The President: Back on Kosovo, we will be in touch with the French. If the Contact Group meets Thursday we have to go forward with the ACTORD no matter what the Russians say. We will tell them we won’t have to do this if your deal works. This guy, all he understands is pressure and he lied before, and pressure will increase the chances that the deal will work.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree Bill, I’ll talk to you in a couple of days. (U)

The President: Okay, goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Tom Crowell, Liz Rogers, Robin Rickard, George Chastain, Jim Smith, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: October 14, 1998, 2:38 - 2:58 p.m. EDT
Oval Office

The President: Hey, Tony, how are you? (UU)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine, fine, how are you? (U)

The President: Good. It’s nice to hear your voice. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It’s good to hear you, too. I saw Mr. Arafat on his way to you. (C)

The President: How did you find him? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: He still thinks it is possible to do a deal. (C)

The President: I think it is. He wants it, I think. In a way, what we have to do is keep them from falling into these old habits. I keep telling them if we don’t make this deal now, we’ve got May 1999 staring us straight in the face and I think it will be a disaster. It will be impossible to avoid a bad outcome unless we get this interim agreement now and get into final status talks. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

CONFIDENTIAL
Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(b,d)
Declassify On: 10/19/08
The President: Maybe. I think he wants to see how it plays, first.

This is aggravated by the fact that their economic situation is worse than when they signed on to peace. The Israelis close borders at the drop of a hat and they never concluded all these economic things, the roads and airport and industrial park, they have been on the verge of doing for months and months. (G)

Somehow we have to convince them they have to resolve all that crap. There is a train wreck facing them in May 1999 unless we somehow can give them some breathing room, some progress and confidence in one another's work. If I were in their position, the one interest they have in common is finding some way to live together before they have this horrible train wreck in 1999. (G)

Prime Minister Blair: I will be here and anything I can do to be helpful I will, just give me a call anytime. I will speak to the Europeans or anything. (G)

The President: Adams and Trimble are both over here, you know. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. (U)

The President: My deputy labor secretary participated in the opening of the road show last week and I think it's going pretty well. I understand de Chastelain's group got the lead on the decommissioning issue, but I heard you think it will have to wait until next spring. If there's anything I can do to help.

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, I am going to speak to McGuinness and Trimble in the next few days. It's tricky stuff. Sinn Fein is saying we will decommission, but not just yet.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

At the moment, we're working on it. If it comes to it, and I think you need to speak to people, I will just give you a call.

The President: I will do anything you want. I don't know how you are going to solve it, they both seem so dug in. If you can figure out anything I can do, I will.

I just cannot thank you enough for the strength you showed on Kosovo. It was fascinating to watch that NAC meeting unfold, compared to where we were three months ago. They all acted as if they were disappointed Milosevic caved. I told my folks here that it bore some of the similarities to Bosnia, where we worked for two years to get everybody off the dime. But it happened a lot quicker, in no small measure because we were in lockstep from the get-go.

Parenthetically, we have to do the same on this global financial thing; maybe we can talk about it in the next few days.

It was amazing to see how that happened. Here is where our next problem in Kosovo is. I think right now we are in a position where we passed the ACTORD -- this action order -- and are suspending it as we see if he complies.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

And as soon as that happens, he will start cheating, but they'll argue it's not enough.

We really need to carefully coordinate our positions to keep maximum pressure on him so we don't have to take military action. We don't want to look weak three months from now.
looks so good right now, just the right thing being done in the right way. We really, really need to coordinate our positions; I’m convinced we can avoid military action if it is always hanging there. But it would take 3-4 months to try to get everybody where they were. And all the forces of the last 3 months will reassert themselves. Milosevic will cheat a little here and there and undermine the integrity of this thing. That is my only sort of yellow caution light, but otherwise it’s terrific. It’s good to have some good news.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We have to figure out a posture. Some guys will say you can’t keep granting 96-hour extensions, and then they will say we ought to say, okay, let’s go to one-week extensions, two-week extensions. The point is, we don’t want to let them put us in a position where we have to do this all over again. The minute we do that, he will start cheating.

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, one thing I want to raise on the global economic stuff. I’ve got a little bit to report. I think Gordon has done brilliant work on the Europeans.
The President: On the speed issue, I agree. On any of these finance problems, E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d) they could have done this for a pittance of what they have to. We have two different issues here. The longer we wait, given the amount of leveraged money that is out there, the greater chance of a more serious collapse that will take more money to fix. I do believe we need to have a hardcore bright line to help Brazil and keep Latin America from getting into this. The risks of our not being successful are greater than when we helped Mexico. But the risk will be minimized if simultaneously we have a comprehensive short-term strategy, including these countries but not limited to these countries.

At least have a framework agreement that in the long run will sort of stabilize confidence and make people think this can be made to work. I believe the global version of what we’re trying to do in our respective countries is riding on this. If this comes apart at the seams, we’ll have hell putting this back together and putting in a coherent social component. That is what I believe. I think it is very, very serious. Much more than what I say in my public remarks, because I have to keep people jollied up here.

We just literally this minute got Gordon’s proposals in. Everybody here will be ready to see him by tomorrow and I will
We just literally this minute got Gordon's proposals in. Everybody here will be ready to see him by tomorrow and I will read this personally. I would like to follow up on the suggestion you made to me before. Let's assume pretty good accord among G-7 treasury and central bank people. There should be some meeting of the G-7, and sooner rather than later to realize some momentum here; even the Wall Street crowd, who hate government interference. Every time I give a talk, the market goes up a bit, and they're disappointed we're not doing more. There is an openness to action here in the market community that I think is important. I don't want to meet if we don't have anything to say, but I think you ought to think about it.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Absolutely. Let me read this. I may call you in a day or so. There's some urgency in timing. If you look at the amount of unregulated, leveraged cash out there and the fact that people on their own are trying to reduce their exposure within emerging markets and in the EU and U.S. already, we already have a liquidity crisis that will affect our economies in less than a year. But simultaneously the amount of risk is so great that the two trends could run head on into each other and cause an even bigger problem. I hope Gordon will come tomorrow, but if there is some problem at Treasury, let me look into that. I don't know about that. Let me have a little time to look over this stuff, but I can't imagine not having him here.

Prime Minister Blair: I'm sure they will be happy to see him.

The President: If you have gotten Tietmeyer and the French central bank moved off where they were at the meeting of 25 countries (G-22) over here where Gordon spoke so well -- it sounded like we'd read the same book just before speaking, we don't want to give them a chance to change again.
The President: Yes. Let me read this stuff and get back to you, and over the next few days we may have to talk again on the Middle East.

Prime Minister Blair: I'll get Gordon and get him to go through it with him.

The President: Tell you what. Let me call Rubin and let everybody read it. They need time to talk about it and they need digestion time. I've been talking to them and pushing them every day. I feel the same sense of urgency you do, and I will be back in touch.

Prime Minister Blair: In the meantime, just get someone to let Gordon or us know about --

The President: -- the timing. Yes, I will.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, that is great. Goodbye. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Bonnie Glick, Sean Tarver, Robert Ford, Tom Crowell, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: October 2, 1998, 4:10 - 4:21 p.m. EDT

Air Force One

The President: Hello? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Tony, how are you doing? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm doing fine. I've just had our party convention this week so I just got that out of the way. (U)

The President: I am doing great. Things are going well here. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: You seem to be routing your enemies and we're all happy about that. Where are you? Are you in a car or something? (U)

The President: I'm doing fine. I am in a plane. I wanted to say one thing to you. I really believe we've got to do something about this financial situation. I liked what you outlined -- your speech was good. G-7 finance ministers are meeting here this weekend. I think we need to come up with some sort of emergency coordinated set of bilateral credit lines. The Germans are against it, but the French are moving toward it. Some central banks are reluctant. We'll need to then get the cooperation from private lenders to stem the tide. I'm very... worried about it affecting Latin America, particularly Brazil. European bankers have so much exposure on these hedge loans that we have a real risk of a world-wide recession here. I think that it is very important we get these guys to reach some kind of agreement. (Z)

Prime Minister Blair: I am in total agreement. We have got to act. I don't think we have seen the worst of this thing by any means. (C)

The President: No, but if we move in quick we could keep it from taking down Brazil. I think it would be really important if you could tell your folks that. I am going to see them on Monday and do my best to bring them around, as well. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Certainly, I will speak to our folks and I think they will, in principle, be in favor of concerted action. I have just read the outline of the comments you made earlier today,

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Exactly. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I couldn't agree with you more. I have not mentioned the prospect of using our exchange rate stabilization fund. I wanted to get IMF funding through Congress, and the Germans are not yet for it. I keep thinking that if we work at this, we can get a lot done, but I have to figure out a way to get them into it. We got to do it, and the central bank is notoriously independent.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: I agree with you. I think there are two issues really.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: I agree with everything you said. If you could urge your people to be forward leaning. Maybe we could talk on Monday before I talk to the IMF. The other thing I wanted to mention was Kosovo. We have begun to prepare Congress and the people for the possibility of air strikes. We wanted to ask NATO to authorize operations next Wednesday.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree with that.

The President: I told Chirac I would talk to him on Tuesday after the UN report is released. Our guys can lead this economic thing, we can say we want a short-term solution and a long-term structural solution that will help. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: What do you think about a summit of some sort at some stage? (C)

The President: I am in favor of it. If we can get anything like remote consensus, I think we should do it by the end of the year and before the final report toward the end of October. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Like the G-8 summit or something. (C)

The President: Yep, maybe even the G-22. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Well, I’m all for it. (C)

The President: Let’s see how far we get on Monday. If we’ve got something to say. How are you doing on Ireland? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: It will be helpful if you can intervene some time in the near future. I’m seeing de Chastelain, who is
I gather you made good progress as well on the Middle East. (≥)

The President: Yes, I think so. I would say we have a better than 50-50 chance to get a deal, to get them into final status talks. Well, take care. (≥)

Prime Minister Blair: That would be good. All the best, Bill. Take care. (U)

The President: We will speak again soon. Goodbye man. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Tom Crowell, Frank Jarosinski, Elizabeth Rogers and Robin Rickard

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: October 25, 1998, 2:14 -2:42 p.m. EST
San Francisco, California

Prime Minister Blair: Hi Bill. Congratulations. (U)

The President: Thank you. It was terrible.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I was going home every morning at two or three. The last go around dragged on for 36 hours, like the Irish thing. But to be fair, the difference was you were integrating both into one political system. Here we were dealing with two diverging political systems.
When you were doing the Irish thing, you were actually in it with them -- you had some leverage. All I can do is give them money and my time. Here I just had to talk them through it and wait it out. It took 85 hours. In the end, everybody pats me on the back, but they have to take all the flak; Arafat took some too. (G)

If it works, I think we have a chance to break the whole thing open. If this is faithfully implemented, this makes the ultimate resolution of bilateral issues easier.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Israelis know in the end they have to have an agreement. I feel good, but we still have along way to go. (G)

Prime Minister Blair: I know exactly how you feel. (G)

The President: It is a lot like the Irish thing, there are a lot of similarities. But you are in it with them. You have more moral authority. You have to make a decision to release prisoners. I don't. E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d) It is an interesting thing. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I was absolutely fascinated watching this on the news. It was a real roller coaster, wasn't it? (G)

The President: It was amazing. We had the agreement, then it got undone. We had a deal. You see there were two prisoners. Most can't understand, but you know what symbolic significance prisoners have in Ireland.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: I can imagine. (G)
The President: The beautiful thing about it was Hussein, who looks like he is at death’s door.

Prime Minister Blair: He is an amazing man.

The President: Hussein kept telling them to think about their children. It was a thing of beauty. I would fly him down and he would wait in his house for 30 to 40 minutes for them to come down. Then he would lecture them in a fatherly way. It was bizarre.

Prime Minister Blair: I thought this would be an extraordinary thing. To have done it is a tremendous achievement. Even making all allowances, it wouldn’t have happened unless you had been there and done it yourself.

The President: There was no way. For you it is the same. But there is a limit to how many times you can do this. I had to just get there and listen to them for hours and hours.

Prime Minister Blair: We end up being part negotiator, part therapist, and part leader.

The President: Someday we should write a book together about these two things, about our role as shrinks.

Prime Minister Blair: I could tell when I saw the signing ceremony. I could just tell what must have been going on -- the nightmares to not let it disintegrate. You see they needed a figure there. This is what you will have done. You will have brought them to see in the end that both of them had to do the deal.

The President: I don’t have any question that I did the right thing, but it was tough for them. I tell you, there is one thing I would like you to do. I wish you would dash off a letter to both of them.

Prime Minister Blair: I am supposed to phone him, but I will write him a letter. I will definitely do that.

The President: Call him, but if you write a letter, it can be released. I know we need to talk about finances and Kosovo a bit, but, the other thing:
Prime Minister Blair: Bill, I will certainly do that. And once again, well done. It was a real personal triumph.

The President: Thank you. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We had Arafat out to the EU get together -- this informal European summit we just had. He told us a bit about it. I will try to gear up the other Europeans to do the same.

The President: Okay, let's talk about Kosovo briefly and then go back to finances. What is your sense of where we are on Kosovo?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I got it. Last night Wes Clark literally stayed up all night working on him. Milosevic agreed to a specific set of things that most reasonable people would conclude if he did between now and the day of the ACTORD, the 27th, he would be in compliance. The one thing that is most important is that nothing we and the French say between now and then should look like anything other than that we are prepared to put the planes in the air. We are on the same wavelength.

I think that he will do enough to comply for us all to agree that he's done what he has to do. In the last several days, he has done a lot of things to comply but also some backsliding. We just have to hang in there.
Prime Minister Blair: I agree absolutely. We are at one with that.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That is good enough right now. I don't want to give him mixed messages. Based on his meeting last night with Wes, he will stick on compliance enough that we will not have to use violence, but only if he thinks we are prepared to do it.

Prime Minister Blair: We are absolutely agreed on that.

The President: On the financial issues, I have a couple of things. I got your letters last week and Bob talked to Gordon Brown. There is a lot of good stuff in there. I would like to propose that we try to put this in context of the heads of state of the G-7 statement.

I would like to give you my view of this and let you respond. First of all, I think we should be looking for -- without raining on what Gordon has done so far -- I think we should be looking for a G-7 statement from the leaders themselves addressing long term reforms and the short term crisis as well as the banking legislation in Japan and what we did with the IMF here.

What I would hope we could do, because I think Rubin has a good sense of how the markets will react, is ideally to get a statement out next week, with or without a conference call with our G-7 colleagues. It's your call as G-7 leader what you would like. Then we would have a statement and it would have the existing consensus on the promise for reform, on a detailed agenda and procedure for achieving consensus.

It would be good if we can get others to agree on this and on a financial architecture. And I would also like to see, and Bob thinks this is really important, an agreement on the proposal for precautionary financing facility. In addition, we could then or later also endorse the package for Brazil that the finance ministers are working on. We know the shape it will be in and who will pony up the money.
It is okay for the finance ministers to announce it, but we need to ratify it in the context of our statement next week -- or when we get it done. If Gordon and Bob Rubin could work to build consensus around these elements, we could then have two complementary statements. First, a leaders' statement describing key elements with consensus on long term reform, endorsing the precautionary financing facility and also endorsing the Brazilian thing. Then the finance ministers and central bank governors could lay it all out in greater detail. I think if you have the finance ministers do something without the leaders at this time, it doesn't break through with the necessary force.

Prime Minister Blair: I am in total agreement with that.

The President: One thing I can't figure out how to do, is to find a device that all of us can live with directly or indirectly to put limits on the degree of speculation while leaving markets open to trade, investment, and even appropriate hedging against currency reevaluation up or down. We can't have over a trillion dollars a day changing hands without some regulatory limits. We can't afford to have hundreds of millions of dollars moving on a 90 percent leverage where they only have to put up 10 percent.

Prime Minister Blair: We need prudent rules.

The President: You just can't have 90 percent leverage -- the compounding is devastating. You also have to have some way to buy the private sector into this to stop hemorrhaging outflows from these countries. Some don't feel this way, but these capital credit controls for the short term can work -- just like if the market drops more than 10 percent in a day, we can suspend trading. But they don't work over the long or medium term. Malaysia and Singapore can do this because they have the cash reserves.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree. These are other things we need to look at. If we do a leaders' statement and finance ministers' statement, it obviates the need for a summit now.

The President: One thing we should leave in reserve, particularly if there are adverse reactions in the market, is that our absolute outside deadline should be the next G-7 meeting, leaving open the possibility of a meeting in December or January or if we think we have something else to say.

But let me say, this is more about your European political situation than mine. Two things: number one, it is important to have the leaders' statement and let the finance ministers fill in the blanks because you have a new leader in Germany.

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely.

The President: And we have a new leader in Italy.

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely right.

The President: It will empower them and makes them members of the club. I think it is very good politics.

Prime Minister Blair: It is why I am anxious to do it. You spotted it absolutely.

The President: Alright. Have you talked to Prodi?
Prime Minister Blair: Yes, he is. You probably don't know D'Alema, do you?

The President: No.

Prime Minister Blair: He did a good job. I'm just sick. I haven't got a chance to call him.

Prime Minister Blair: He would like that.

The President: There are center left governments in every country in Europe now.

Prime Minister Blair: It is interesting with its possibilities, but it also poses problems.

The President: Now that we have the responsibilities we have to bear the burdens of the consequences.

Prime Minister Blair: The summit was quite interesting -- the

The President: I'll have Rubin follow up with Gordon Brown. We may want to do a conference call next week. We can put out our general statement on architecture of the precautionary financing facility and ratify it when it is done.

Prime Minister Blair: That would be great.

The President: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)] it will give us greater credibility.

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely.
The President: We also need to show we are serious on Brazil. (Z)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay Bill. All the very best and once again congratulations. (U)

The President: Okay, goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Tony Blair

Notetakers: Tom Crowell, Frank Jarosinski,
George Chastain, Jenny McGee and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: November 3, 1998, 3:29 - 3:37 p.m. EST
Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill, how are you? (U)

The President: Fine, how are you doing? It's election day, so I am just sitting around. Essentially, the elections are going well. These are good times, but the Republicans are in the majority and have more money than we do. Not since 1922 has the president's party gained seats, but we are doing well and the exit polls look good. They have outspent us, but we essentially have a good message going. (U)

I understand that you have been briefed on Bill Cohen's message on Iraq. I really appreciate all that you have said publicly, but I still think that we have to take decisive action this time to respond to Saddam's challenge. It is clear to me that Saddam really wants to force the Council to lift sanctions without giving up his weapons of mass destruction and missile program. The Vice President talked to Crown Prince Abdallah today in Saudi Arabia, and he promised the support that we need. Bill is discussing the details with him tonight in Riyadh. [C]

We are working on a resolution for the Council, and I hope that it can be finished in a couple of days. But it seems to me that we need to be in a position to act soon, rather than drag it out. We need to be in touch with Chirac. I still have questions about what they would say about the use of force. The French have been great in their public comments -- they have been tough on Iraq -- but anything that you can do to keep Chirac on board. I will call him tomorrow. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Maybe I should call him. (C)

The President: I think you should. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I actually made my comments in a press conference with Schroeder yesterday.

I will talk to Chirac in the next day to see where we stand. (C)

The President: As far as the Russians are concerned, they seem pretty angry, too. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Kofi seems to be keeping his distance since Saddam shafted him. What do you think about sooner rather than later? (C)

The President: I agree with you. Kofi seems to be keeping his distance since Saddam shafted him. What do you think about sooner rather than later? (C)
The President: I agree with that. [LET]

Prime Minister Blair: How soon were you thinking of, Bill? [LET]

The President: I don’t know. I was thinking of over the next several days. It will take time to set things up and to develop a case against him. I’ve got to know who is dancing with us and who is not. I just wanted to check your temperature on it and ask you to call Chirac. On the details, we need to be in very close touch and work together. [LET]

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Keep your fingers crossed for us tonight. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: All right. All the very best to you, Bill. (U)

The President: Thanks. Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --

CONFIDENTIAL

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Tony Blair of the United Kingdom

NOTE-TAKERS: Bonnie Glick, Sean Tarver, Joel Schrader, David Higgins, Jim Smith and Roger Merletti

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: December 11, 1998 -- 1:00 p.m. - 1:15 p.m. EDT

Oval Office

The President: Hello. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Hey, Tony. How are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine. I am at the EU summit in Vienna. (U)

The President: Is it cold in Vienna? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It is absolutely freezing. Amazingly cold, but a beautiful city. (U)

The President: I just wanted to check in with you on Iraq and Ireland before I go to the Middle East this weekend. On November 15, we said we would hold off on any strike while we test Saddam's promise to cooperate with UNSCOM. So far, the results have been mixed. There has been a lot of monitoring, which is easy for the Iraqis to accept. But, UNSCOM was blocked at Ba'ath party headquarters this week. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. (U)

TOP SECRET

Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5 (a)(d)
Declassify on: 12/14/08

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
The President: And they've received only 1 of 10 documents they asked for, and Iraq is making inspections harder than they have to be. I can't tell if they are trying to get some concession on sanctions review, or if they think we can't do anything at this time of year. If Iraq blocks another inspection this weekend and if Butler finds that they are not cooperating as they are required to do under the October 30 Security Council letter -- if he actually says that -- I am inclined to think that we should take the action that we suspended in November. But, if he isn't significantly undercutting UNSCOM's ability to do its job and Butler says that, I think he will simply have slipped the disarmament noose forever. Now, we have a very narrow window to operate with because of Ramadan and my going to Israel this weekend. We will need to talk, and I will have to find you wherever you are. If the inspections are not blocked, then we have to figure out how to handle the comprehensive review issue. Do we delay it or go forward? If we delay it, there will almost certainly be a crisis, and out of respect for their faith, we can't hit them during Ramadan.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We don't have much, I don't think.

Prime Minister Blair: No.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We think we can get them out in 24 hours. It's a much quicker turn-around. This may be part of what he is miscalculating. He may think he will have more notice than he would.
Prime Minister Blair: Right. What happens if we start to take action and then Ramadan starts, as it were? Ramadan starts next Friday? (J)

The President: If we start on Wednesday, we have enough time. They assure me we do. (J)

Prime Minister Blair: Then, we can go in and get out by Ramadan? (J)

The President: Yes, we have four days. That's plenty of time. We can do it. (J)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d) So, Butler is going to try to get more access tomorrow? (J)

The President: He has two more days, and then say whatever he says. (J)

Prime Minister Blair: Right. Do we know what he is going to say? (J)

The President: No, we don't. My gut is that he most likely is going to say that he got some cooperation, but not full. This will make us think really hard on whether we can in good conscience vote for this comprehensive review, and if we don't, he will provoke a crisis over that. It seems to me that it is pretty substantial that he didn't let them go into Ba'ath party headquarters. Anyway, you will have to talk to your folks, and we may have to talk again in a few days when I am in the Mideast. (J)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay. (J)

The President: Anyway, the other thing I wanted to tell you was that I talked to Trimble and Adams on Tuesday. I missed Hume because he had to leave for Oslo. I made it clear privately and publicly in a speech that decommissioning is essential,
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I did all I could. If there is anything else I can do, just let me know. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: There may be a time to speak to Adams again, but, for now, it is for us to sort out. (S)

The President: Okay, I agree with that. I just wanted to mention very briefly that I am going to make a real push to resolve the Cyprus issue next year. But, before that, we have to avert this missile problem next month. I hope when you see Clerides on Saturday that you persuade him to stop delivery to Cyprus. It would be terrible. I hope you will do what you can. You really tried to get the EU to soften its stance on Turkey. I don’t know if the coming of Schroeder helps at all. Maybe, you can get a little better language in your statement in Vienna.

I think this missile deal really bothers me because of the Russian connection, and I see so much in Russia going south on us. Their space scientists haven’t received a check in eight months, and they could be making a fortune on missile launches from us.
If you could make headway, I would appreciate it.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. I will speak to Clerides tomorrow.

The President: After the first of the year, after I get all this crap behind me, I would like to talk to you about this.

Prime Minister Blair: I'd like to talk to you about a bunch of things because there is a lot going on here in Europe.

The President: How is Schroeder working out?

Prime Minister Blair: Actually, I like him very much.

The President: I do, too. The reason I mentioned this is because I had a good talk with him on Turkey.

Now, there are other problems with Turkey, such as human rights. Anyway, you might nose around Vienna and see if you can send him help.

Prime Minister Blair: Sure, I will try. There may be an opportunity at dinner tonight.

The President:
Prime Minister Blair: Alright, Bill. See you soon. (U)

The President: All the best. Bye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Tony Blair

Notetakers: James Smith, Roger Merletti, Frank Jarosinski and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: January 21, 1999, 2:26-2:53 p.m. EST
Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. Kosovo.

The President: I completely agree with you on that. Obviously, we have to do something and be prepared to take some action and be determined not to let him undermine the KVM and work over Walker. I don't want to be slow or indecisive. I will try to get Congress to go along with me and not stop it.

Domestic politics aside, my problem about ground forces is that if we send them in without some type of agreement beforehand -- it doesn't have to be as detailed as Dayton --

---

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

---

I really think we have to do something, but I know if we do military action without a political plan we will have a problem.

Prime Minister Blair:

---

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

---

The President: I agree with that. On the other hand, this is likely to be one of those things where we can't see completely to the end.

---

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

---

We have to keep working on it. We are in a much different situation than we were legally and politically in Bosnia because the world has said these people deserve autonomy but not independence. I don't want to get into a pickle, but now that 45 people have been slaughtered and Milosevic is trying to throw the KVM out, we don't have any choice but to do something.
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: One thing is to go to them and say, "Look, if you want us to do any more you have to help, too." They probably have as many violations of cease-fires as Milosevic, though his are more egregious. "For a long-term resolution you have to come to the table too, you can't have it both ways, and you never take any responsibility." (C)

Prime Minister Blair: It's important we do that. (C)

The President: They may ignore it but we have to try. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: If we do that in a really concerted way, we may get somewhere. I think it very important we do that,

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That makes a lot more sense.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. (U)

The President: It is a very difficult problem and I don't pretend to have all the answers. We have to be careful not to be weak and move decisively with NATO now, knowing it won't solve the problem without a political resolution.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

I would be in an impossible position. I may not be able to sell it at any time with Congress, but I certainly can't do it unless there is an appropriate environment. I think we agree we have to keep working and go full speed ahead with NATO.

Prime Minister Blair: I think that is exactly right.

The President: I agree with that. That is good. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree. That is what we need to do. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree with that. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill, let’s keep in touch on that.

The President: Can I do anything? Can I help at all? (U)
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I'm really worried. Gerry Adams was here not long ago, and I had a firm talk with him. I am really getting kind of frustrated by them not doing anything.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: You just let me know. I am concerned that they have not hit a lick of this.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, it does. I don't know how... just bizarre.
The President: All right. What else?

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Let me tell you what we're going on and what the lay of the land is. We tried to negotiate to get a solution to the EU restrictions in '92. I would still like to do it. The problem now for me is, I don't have any flexibility for delaying. Congress was going to impose them by statute, and that was trouble that I headed off. But the only way I could do it was by sending them a letter that said I would do it, and basically there is a little time left. February 1 plus 10 days, then there is probably another week after that before Customs could enforce it. If there is any way you think your guys have flexibility and work out a solution I would like to do it, but one operation here lost nearly a billion dollars since this all happened. The law is pretty clear. I don't want to do anything to cause you problems. In principle, I don't want Congress legislating in the trade area. We had to send a letter that we would do it, and now time has run out. So if there is anything we can do, I will do it. I don't want to cause you any trouble but we're sort of stuck on it.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I know it does. I've been fooling with it a long time and also some people who are pushing it have enormous influence in Congress and I know them well. We sort of delayed this for years and if there is any way we can resolve it, it would be a good thing.

Let me ask you another thing. Menem was here and he said he has another year in office.

He has a great economic policy. We're trying to stave off the financial crisis from reaching Latin America, and Brazil is shaky. He asked if you might be able to do something on it. The thing he mentioned the most was travel.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d) (C)
The President: It's something you might think about. He would like to work out some accommodation. The thing he mentioned three different times was travel restrictions.

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]
He was here last week.

The President: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)]
There was a war, which they lost, and he understands that. But there are Argentines with relatives there, or relatives buried there, and if they could get some across, to get access to do things. Whatever happens, if you could look into it, without raising the fundamental questions from the war, it would be positive for you and him.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay. I will look at that. Bill, we'll speak soon.

The President: Okay. Bye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: James Smith, Roger Merletti, David Higgins, Matthew Sibley, Elizabeth Rodgers, Robin Rickard, Michael Manning, Larry Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: February 4, 1999, 2:13-2:30 p.m. EST
Oval Office

The President: Nice to hear your voice. Al had a wonderful time. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It was great. He went down well. He was fantastic with all the New Deal programs. He met with all those business people. The unemployment program was really impressive. I thought it was a good visit and he was fantastic on it. (U)

The President: He also liked when he went into Prescott's office and the only decoration was a bowl of bananas. I heard all about it. He was very happy. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I hope we get all that sorted out. (U)

The President: My staff won't let me talk to you unless I have a banana at hand. I'm sitting here with a banana; it's a big, ugly, brownish one. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Now Bill, I thought we should have a word about Kosovo. (C)

CONFIDENTIAL
Reason: 1.5(d)
Declassify On: 2/5/08
The President: Yes. Let me tell you, the Prime Ministers of both Macedonia and Albania were here today and they make us look like old men. They are 31 and 33 years old.

Prime Minister Blair: I think Robin and Madeleine did a really good job and we got a plan. The parties are coming on Saturday and the KLA are involved, as well. That is all good.

The President: I agree. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d))

The President: First of all, I agree with everything you say about maintaining pressure on Belgrade and the Kosovars on the interim settlement. I'm encouraged by Saturday's talks. There is no other way it works over the long run unless we can get a peace agreement and troops on the ground. (C)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

It is a hard sell in Congress. They still lecture me on Bosnia and how we didn't pay for it in advance. I tell them Bosnia is a great success story and they ought to be proud of it and keep it going, and not let it be wiped out. I gather there is a general feeling that a lot of European countries are willing to make troop contributions. That will help me to get Congress to support participation. You know I always want to be part of these things. (C)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
I just gave a speech today. I basically said we were considering our participation and talking to Congress about it. I will make the strongest case I can, but our system is that they have to come up with money for it. The more European countries that are willing to participate and the greater extent, the better luck I will have with the Republican Congress.

Ironically, all the business with me might help us get something done here. I think the announcement of substantial British participation, which I gather is your decision, will help us a lot. I want to help and I made my first big public pitch today. We will work with Congress and stay in close touch. Our military people are in contact and are simultaneously designing this concerning who contributes what. I will do the best that I can. I wish I could give you a number now, but I don’t know what level yet. I am working it and I’ll do the best I can.

Prime Minister Blair: Well, Bill, that is great.

The President: Great. Let me say, there’s one other thing that would help me. If you put out that we talked, say that we have this under active consideration. That is what I just said publicly. If you could not say that I have made a definite decision. Because the Congress is Republican, at every public hearing we have, they start moping and saying that I expect them to fall in line afterward because they never refuse to support the troops. If you could say I haven’t made a decision, that would give me another day to massage the congressional psyche and break it loose here.

Prime Minister Blair: Don’t worry, that is absolutely fine. That is very good indeed. Thanks, as ever.

The President: Well, you are doing great. You even got good press in the New York Times. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Well, it cost a lot of money. (U)
The President: You got good press in the New York Times and I got a good editorial in the Guardian. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, you got an editorial in the Guardian. (U)

The President: They said I was more liberal than you. I don’t know if that is good or bad. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Well, it’s good for you. Your State of the Union, as I suspected, had a big impact around Europe. I was in Vienna last week with center-left leaders. It made a big impact there. (U)

The President: We need to think about our next steps. I thought that NYU conference was good. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: They (the Center-left leaders) are absolutely desperate for it. They now buy entirely the argument that we can learn from America. The State of the Union did help. The leader of the United States was talking about building a cohesive, peaceful society and the rest of it. It was language they can understand. (U)

The President: Yes. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I think we certainly should do some more. They are desperate. (U)

The President: One thing I think you should have your guys thinking about. What is our response to tough challenges? Like, is there a third way response to financial crises? How do we stop the reversal of trade liberalization and take it up again? With all these troubles in Asia, the temptations to close down the movement for trade liberalization will be great. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I think that is absolutely right. It has to be a big part of our discussions. (U)
The President: I agree with that. I think when we do the next G-8 meeting we really ought to give some thought to setting up our trade position and also think about what wrinkles need to be in the finance system position as well. We will have a lot to talk about in advance, but the G-8 will give you a forum and me a forum and our crowd a forum to elevate some of these issues.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree completely.

The President: We will be in constant touch the next few days to wrap it up and nail down what to do.

Prime Minister Blair: King Hussein. What a terrible thing. I'm really sorry.

The President: Yes, he just left here. He is going home on life support. You know he did his best, but I will be surprised if he pulls out of this.

Prime Minister Blair: I just saw him a couple of days ago and thought he was looking better.

The President: He had a severe relapse. Noor brought him over here. I just think that this is the way these conditions are. They overwhelm your system and you have nothing left.

Prime Minister Blair: It's a shame for the guy. Bill, just one other thing.
The President: Any time, day or night. It is my own private passion. I have been worried for you. To the people on the outside, it seems idiotic that we would allow these elements to disrupt progress. You are where you are and whatever I can do to dislodge it, let me know. If you have something specific for me to come at them with, let me know that, too. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Is Bertie going to be all right? (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I hope so. We need him. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Really, we do need him.

The President: Yes. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Let us keep in touch on Kosovo and other matters. (C)

The President: All right, man. I'll see you soon. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: All right, Bill. All the best. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair Of the United Kingdom

PARTICIPANTS: The President
British Prime Minister Blair

Notetaker: Bonnie Glick, David Higgins, Robin Richard, Joel Schrader, James Smith

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: February 19, 1999, 10:59 a.m. - 11:24 a.m. EST Oval Office

The President: How are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine. How are you? (U)

The President: Okay. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Kosovo --

Chirac is with you today? (C)

The President: He is here and I will meet with him in a few minutes.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let's make sure we are on the same page.
The President: Well, I agree with that. The trick is to give him some chance to come around and not seem like we're going on unlimitedly.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: I agree with that.

What was he like? You had Schroeder there, didn't you?

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: I agree with that. That is good. I think we are doing all right on getting the enabling force together. I don't know if Milosevic is playing brinkmanship or not. He seems to believe he loses Serbia if he lets NATO in there. ☐

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah.

The President: Let me ask you a couple of questions. What is your sense on KVM? I know the EU is interested in a new structure, [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)](I think that can be accomplished by the OSCE maintaining the lead with civilian implementation. [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)](I like the idea that the Europeans have been so forthcoming, and I want to be supportive, but I don't want to screw it up. ☐)

Prime Minister Blair: ☐

The President: That's right. ☐

Prime Minister Blair: ☐

Is there anything else? (U)

The President: No, I don't think so. What about Northern Ireland? Jim Steinberg had a good meeting with Ambassador Christopher Meyer yesterday on the outlook for the next two months. We are working on some ideas to complement your strategy for a push by the first anniversary of the Good Friday Agreement. I am ready to do my part around St. Patrick's day here and look forward to seeing Mo Mowlam. You have made a lot of progress and seem to have gotten it back on track. ☐

Prime Minister Blair: ☐
The President: I'm with you. It could boomerang on us but we have no choice.

Prime Minister Blair: obviously you and I should speak before St. Patrick's day.

The President: I agree.

Prime Minister Blair: so there it is, I think. So Bill, let's keep in close touch on things.
Six months or so ago when I spoke to you, I was in a big fight with my Treasury guys about the need to have leaders get together on it and chart a course where we change the orientation of the IMF a little bit and get into the necessity for international standards for banking. We really are moving in steps, in increments towards a Bretton Woods II arrangement. I think we realized we rushed into getting money into them without them having the internal protection they needed. But a lot of Treasury folks treat this like Einstein looking for the theory of relativity or biologists looking for the cure for cancer: when they find it they will tell us. I felt our Treasury kept resisting a big meeting six months ago because markets were so shaky that if we met and did not come up with an answer it would foster instability. They don't feel that way anymore.

We have to find a way around the G-7 or otherwise try to get this thing kicked off.

We do need some forum in which leaders can clearly articulate where we are, what we have done, and where we are going.

A lot of people are upset about the composition of the committee of the 25 nations (G-22) meeting because they are not a sanctioned IMF type group. Maybe the G-7 cuts a lot of people out of the loop and a lot of those nations think Europe is over-represented. I am not hung up on that myself but, we do need to find a way to have higher visibility to let the world know we are working toward a more stable position. We ought to try to resolve this when the G-7 meets in Germany.
The President: Yes, I like that. What do you think Chirac will say? (☞)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I got it. I'm with you. I think we are on same track, but we need to figure out how to keep going. I may call you back after I talk to him, but I will try to get him in the right frame of mind. (☞)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I am worried about Russia as well. Sandy and I have spent some quite intense discussion time on this.

The Russians have no tax system. I don't know what to do about all that either, but we should talk about it. It's almost like a psychological problem, in part, as well as the obvious political problem. We may need to put a little more money on the table for them to do that. (☞)

Prime Minister Blair: You and I can talk about it later.

The President: All right, I'll follow up. I'm going to meet with Jacques right now. (☞)

--End of Conversation--
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Tony Blair

Notetakers: George Chastain, Doug Bayley, Frank Jarosinski, Matthew Sibley, Roger Merletti, Jim Smith and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: March 4, 1999, 4:40 - 5:04 p.m. EST
Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, how are you doing? (U)

The President: I'm fine, I guess. I just got a bunch of stuff going on here, but everything is all right. How are you doing? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I am fine. I'm really sorry to bother you about this damn thing.

The President: When is the election, May 6? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, May 6.

The President: Let me tell you what. I have to be a little careful about how I say this. Most of our people think that the WTO panel may approve a smaller aggregate amount. If they do, I will try to do what I can to be helpful.

CONFIDENTIAL

Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(d)
Declassify On: 3/5/08
we do this, it will presumably be well in advance of the election. Anything you can do through Leon to get the WTO panel to make their decision would be very helpful. The only way we can get nailed is if they approve the exact amount, but I assume it will be lower, then we'll have an opportunity.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: They are significant. One of the things I've tried to do before, and I hope this year will pass, is a new initiative to get more money through trade and investment. They're extremely vulnerable to drug lords, and bananas will be essentially a holding action. I think that maybe this is something the European Union and United States can do together and get them more help down there. I am worried about both Caribbean and Central America because of this storm.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

I think it is a legitimate serious issue, not just about two Central American countries going broke. It's a deeper thing on all sides. I would be prepared to work on that. The main thing between now and May is to get these guys to talk. If you could get the WTO panel to make a rapid decision, maybe we could work something through on this.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What they could do, what I am worried about, is they may be sympathetic to you, and maybe rule against you on the merits. If they keep kicking the can down the road, that would be the worst for you politically.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree with you. I'm trying to pass a billion dollar trade initiative and all the right-wing Republicans bailed out on me yesterday. They spent all that money, billions and billions, supporting dictatorships and taking sides in civil wars, but they won't help me get them back on their feet. They're trying to keep me from getting it before I go down there next week.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I got it. Look, basically what is at stake here is I've had to fight back 80 percent of both parties in Congress who want to legislate something worse than what I did. The whole credibility of the WTO is at issue here. But what is important, in order for me to do anything, is for the WTO to decide sooner rather than later. I should have some flexibility if they decide that it should be X million dollars less.

Prime Minister Blair: That would be very helpful.

The President: That is why it's important not to talk about it. Because if we do I will have everybody all over me.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Can I ask you another quick question. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. (U)

The President: What do you want me to say on St. Patrick's Day over here? Where will we be by then? (G)

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Let me ask you this. Is there some way to manifest the commitment by something they say to you or me? Then a week later, some big declaration on decommissioning. Is there some way to do it that way?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Right now, they're saying trust me. But they could make these statements, then dick around.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: How do they justify the Good Friday accords?

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: I completely agree. If you have any more instructions or advice between now and St. Patrick's Day, I'll be glad to have it. But, I got it.

Prime Minister Blair: *

The President: I think we have a chance to get the Kosovars to all right on the Kosovo agreement.

Prime Minister Blair: Really? (C)

The President: Yes. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: That would be great.

The President: Bob Dole went over there today for me. He's been a champion of theirs. I'd say we have a pretty good chance. I'm worried about the possibility of the Kosovars saying yes, Milosevic saying no, and NATO will blink. I'm really worried. We need to suck it up. You and I may have to do another round of calls.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: All right. Let me know about all this other stuff.

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks a lot. (U)

The President: I'll see you. If you have anything more on the other issues, let me know, directly or indirectly, through our channels. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Again, sorry to trouble you. (U)

The President: That's okay. I may have to start ordering 50 percent of my bananas from the Caribbean and Central America. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. All the very best to you. See you. (U)

The President: Good-bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT:        Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS:   The President
                Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Tom Crowell, George Chastain, Robert Ford, Matt Sibley, Lawrence Butler and Miriam Sapiro

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: March 14, 1999, 1:55-2:12 p.m. EST
                    The Residence

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Hi, Tony. I had a really good trip down to Central America. I am a bit tired. It was a good trip. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Did you just get back? (U)

The President: I got back a couple of days ago and then had to turn around and go to Arkansas. But it was a good trip. The thing I found interesting was that despite all the horrible problems they have had with the hurricane and the legacy of all of the civil wars, those places are very well governed, with enormous potential. They're all very poor, except for Costa Rica, but they're very well governed. The biggest problem is in the aftermath of all the civil wars a lot of guns were left there, something that you know about. There are also a lot of criminal gangs in the rural areas that make them less than safe so it is hard to get tourism going there. In El Salvador there were former rebels and soldiers in suits listening to my speech. It was quite nice. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I thought we could have a quick word on Northern Ireland before they all get there. (U)

The President: I agree. (U)
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: First, I completely agree with that. George Mitchell believes that there can't be very much time between what Trimble does and the movement on decommissioning. They need to give some sort of private assurances that they can pocket. If they can't give it to Bertie or DeChastelain, to you or someone. I am beginning to get a little concerned.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree. I will do whatever I can to help get this done. We will just have to see, but I am quite hopeful.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: That's fine. I don't mind. I am determined not to let this get away. We need this badly, and I would like to resolve this in the first half of this year, if we can. This will give us the momentum while all the other things are going on. I will do whatever you want me to. I will do whatever it takes.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, I told D'Alema you can do whatever you should. We have never had a problem with the EU having a different position than the United States. Even going back before my presidency, we were sponsors of the resolution leading to the Oslo accords. We have to say those issues will have to be resolved in the last phase.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Exactly. That is my position as a matter of principle.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: Okay, thanks. I think you are right where you need to be. If you think it helps, do it. If not, then don't do it. Let

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:
The President: That is my conclusion.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: When is the G-7 meeting in Germany?

Prime Minister Blair: In the middle of June.

The President: You are going to do something here with the DLC, aren't you? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, in April. (C)

The President: Our guys are worried about it raining on NATO's parade. We got huge press coverage here yesterday. They went to Harry Truman's home to sign the documents for the NATO event with Poland, Hungary, and the Czech Republic. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me have a look at my schedule. In the first half of the year it would be extremely difficult to make a separate trip, but if I am in Germany, maybe I can add a day onto my trip. Where does he want me to do it, in Florence?

Prime Minister Blair: I think so.

The President: That would be a real burden, would it not? Someone has to shoulder the responsibility.

Prime Minister Blair: Have you been there before? (C)

The President: Yes, Hillary and I spent a wonderful week there. As a matter of fact, it was ten years ago this week.

Prime Minister Blair: I love it. It is one of my favorite cities in the world. I will think about it and get back to you.
The President: Good. I think that we are in sync on the other two matters. I won a big vote in Congress on Kosovo. I think it's interesting because when the Republicans pushed for it, they didn't think I would win it. Our guys worked very hard on it and won a big vote with explicit authorization to deploy, consistent with the conditions I've stated. I feel good about it. But I don't think there is any way that Milosevic will take this deal. But we believe the Kosovars will take it, and then we will be right back on the griddle, you and I.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: If the Kosovars say yes, and they have been difficult, we may even get Milosevic to the point where he will say yes -- if we stay tough and if we are prepared to use force. But if not, he will jerk us around.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yeah, I will do that. Do you want me to buy a cashmere sweater from him with duties?

Prime Minister Blair: You don't have to do that or give him bananas.

The President: I wish we could get this resolved before your elections, you know.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We got a really rough column that said this is not what the new world order was meant to be. Kosovo goes to hell, and we have a war over this.

Prime Minister Blair: Do shake hands with him.
The President: I thought I could have my whole wardrobe of Scottish cashmere brought down to him. The Irish wouldn't like it. Hell, I think even the Irish sweaters I have are Scottish. Okay, I will see you.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, all the best to you. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Doug Bayley, Frank Jarosinski, Joel Schrader, Miles Murphy and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: March 21, 1999, 12:50 - 1:12 p.m. EST
Residence

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: How are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm fine. How were things last week? (U)

The President: What do you mean, last week? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: With the Irish -- Gerry Adams, Trimble and everything. (R)

The President: I'm sorry; I have been through all kinds of hell with this Kosovo thing. You ought to get a transcript of George Mitchell's comments to them. I gave him a Medal of Freedom here. He said, "I don't want to talk about what I did, but what needs to be done." He said, "I hope that about a thousand people will ignore me while I make these remarks to the parties." It was devastating. He was great. (R)

Prime Minister Blair: I heard he was brilliant. (R)

The President: I did exactly what you asked me to. Hell, I don't know. It looks to me like Gerry needs some sort of cover

SECRET
Reason: 1.5(d)
Declassify On: 3/21/09

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
for demilitarization and then can give cover to Trimble to do what he needs to do. It is important to keep pushing it forward. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, that’s what we will do. (C)

The President: Anyway, I did the very best I could. I had chills running up and down my spine yesterday. There is a new book here by Daniel Silva who is a former Washington journalist. The book is called “The Marching Season” and you are in it. For some reason he uses a fictitious President, but the real you. There is an ultrasecret Protestant group and they are out there acting against everybody -- Protestants, Catholics. It’s purely fictional, but it gave me the chills about what could happen if we don’t keep doing this. I was frustrated, and I know you are, but I don’t know what else I can do. I will do whatever. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill, thanks anyway for last week. (C)

The President: You have to table some fix for this and let us pressure Adams to take it. I don’t think there is anything else we can do. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Can we talk Kosovo? Milosevic has agreed to meet Holbrooke. He will go over there tomorrow and tell him he will bear the full responsibility for consequences for NATO military action unless he does what he is told to do. I got reports this morning of one village of 13,000 people that has been completely evacuated.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
Primakov is supposed to come here next week, and I need to give him a heads up so if he wants to cancel he can. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely. (S)

The President:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I couldn't agree more.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

There are one or two issues that I want to talk to you about before going on, but we can talk in the next day or two on that. (S)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I agree with that. I had a meeting with a lot of members of Congress and several Republicans said that it sounds bad -- if he were out there practicing ethnic cleansing again we would support it, but if we take the initiative and he moves against the people it will look like we caused it. (S)
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: The reason we did not take any other action is because the peace process was going on.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That is what my critics here are going to say.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree with that. Let me ask you this. How are the Tories reacting at home? Are they supporting you?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Our right wing isolationists certainly would if they thought they could get public opinion on their side and since they have the parliamentary majority they would cause a problem. The Republicans fluctuate between isolationism and unilateral action. They want the biggest possible military and want to spend money on only the military and concrete, but never want to use it on anything. I think that in the near term I am in need of a stronger presentational argument than you are. I am hoping that it will be fine, I couldn’t agree more that we need to get a strong presentation. If the others are going with us, we need Chirac and Schroeder saying the same thing.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, I will call them when I get off the phone with you. I understand they are even chiding us a little bit about whether we are moving quickly enough.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

I have to call and tell him the truth and let him stay home if he wants to. But he still needs to come here because he needs the money and the IMF agreement worked out.

Prime Minister Blair: (S)

The President: I am still very worried about it. And I am worried about them because the Duma seems incapable of doing anything positive to help themselves along. We could save them a lot of money if they could ratify START II. Then I could go immediately to START III. And then I could pass this bill to accelerate threat reduction with the nuclear stockpile that could occupy as many as 20,000 or half the military scientists over the next two years. But the Duma seems incapable of doing a lot of this stuff. I don’t think we have any choice whatsoever. We don’t want to polarize them further, but we need to take some form of action.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: You got it. One thing we have to figure out is a strategy that will keep the money there that we pump in. All the money disappeared in 48 hours the last time.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Why don’t we plan on talking tomorrow or the next day and we will work on Kosovo right now. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, we will be in a position to discuss it again tomorrow. (E)

The President: Okay man. Sorry I didn’t do more on Ireland, but I tried. I even got Trimble and Adams to sit in my private office alone for a while. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Well it went off very well here. (E)

The President: I think the public vibes were very good indeed, but I didn’t have the feeling that I helped you move the ball forward on the substance of it. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Well it went off very well here. (E)

The President: I don’t think Gerry wants it to get off the tracks and that is heartening. I know damn well Trimble does not, but he wants his leadership position as well. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: (E)

The President: If you could have a referendum on this, the people could come up with 15 permutations. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: (E)

The President: That’s another thing I thought about. I think the IRA people with personal history have a lot more ideology on this whole decommissioning issue than the facts warrant. They seem to think that if they unilaterally do this, it is like saying that what the struggle is all about and what they said all those years is illegitimate. They are loading a lot of crap that does not need to be loaded. The only way to get off the psychological hook is to make it part of a bigger disarmament or find some proposal people could ratify and let their reps off the hook. The atmospherics seem great, but I didn’t have any specifics that I could glean. I don’t see Trimble having a viable option. I did not mean to be so negative but I don’t think Sinn Fein thinks they can say different words and make it happen. I don’t think words alone will do it. [SF]

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: All right man. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I agree. If there is a problem with Chirac or Schroeder I will have to call you back. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I am here. (U)

The President: Bye, Tony. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: March 23, 1999, 5:11-5:22 p.m. EST
The Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: I'm fine. I'm in Berlin. (U)

The President: I know, Gerhard just told me you were there. Holbrooke is on his way back. Milosevic stiffed him. He wouldn't agree to a cease-fire. He was belligerent and it seems to me he's strongly poised to unleash greater violence in Kosovo.

I want to talk about two things: first, Primakov has postponed his visit to Washington. I think that's the best outcome given the circumstances. Maybe you can call him in the next day or two and tell him you understand why he didn't come to Washington.
Prime Minister Blair:

The President:

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, we sat around the room today saying, "Geez, this is really bad. We could lose what we did in Bosnia but we have no option." If we don't, he will just clean them out, kill a bunch of people and do bad things.
Prime Minister Blair: I will speak to him about that.

The President: I am completely there and knew you would be too.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, I will speak to him about that.
The President: I couldn't agree more.

Prime Minister Blair: We will make strong points and I will speak to D'Alema and Chirac tomorrow.

The President: There have never been any natural boundaries. I couldn't agree more.

The President: Great, if you want to call me any time of the day or night, call me. I don't expect to sleep much tonight.

Prime Minister Blair: Tougher than Iraq isn't it?

The President: Yeah. They have better air defenses and we have people in the vicinity that are vulnerable. The stakes are high but the potential benefits are enormous.

Prime Minister Blair: I hope Milosevic can find a way out. He compares it to the Ottoman Empire and how they stopped them in Bosnia, and now he stands up to the Empire of the West. It is crazy.

The President: Okay. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: All right, Bill. All the best. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Joel Schrader, Miles Murphy, Jenny McGee, Jim Smith and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: March 30, 1999, 6:12 - 6:24 p.m. EST
Residence

Prime Minister Blair: Hi Bill. (U)
The President: Hey Tony. How are you doing? Are you sleepy? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Not much sleep in Northern Ireland. (U)
The President: Kind of makes you long for the Albanians, doesn't it? (S)

Prime Minister Blair: Pretty much. How is it going there? (S)
The President: I think your statements have been great. We seem to have a real consensus.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Yes, I agree with that. They're all saying maybe we didn't think it through, but we didn't have all the time in the world.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

SECRET
Reason: 1.5(a,b,d)
Declassify On: 4/1/09
I urge you to keep briefed on this issue on particulars, in part because we are being nicked and dimed on some of the details by the Allies. My instinct is to go on for maximum effectiveness.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We need them over here. Who were they?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Are they living in London now, or Albania? Where?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Can you have your people send the names to our people so we know who they are? I want to stage a meeting here to give them some American publicity.

Prime Minister Blair: I will put that in train.

The President: Alright, where are we on Ireland?
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Why? What is their argument?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What is the IRA excuse for not doing it?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: How can it be surrender when the war is over?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: And they don't buy that?
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Do you want me to call Gerry?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: When do you want me to call Adams?

Prime Minister Blair: I think it's worth calling him. What time is it now?

The President: It's getting late. What is it, twelve-thirty there?

Prime Minister Blair: It's probably not too late to call him even now.

The President: But in no case no later than tomorrow. OK, I'll see what I can do.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: All he ever wanted was an aggravated bonfire. To all of us linear thinkers it doesn't seem like much of a big deal.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: It doesn't look like surrender if you have all these people involved being let out of prison and all the others are involved. It's crazy.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President:  What are you offering?  What is Bertie offering?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:  That's got to be harder for them.  (e)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:  Okay, I will follow up and give you a report.  I have to call you tomorrow anyway.  Thanks, Tony.  (e)

Prime Minister Blair:  Okay, thank you.  (U)

-- End of Conversation --

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair and Irish Prime Minister Ahern (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair
Prime Minister Ahern

Notetakers: Jenny McGee, Miles Murphy, Matt Sibley, Bob Ford and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: April 1, 1999, 6:32 - 6:38 a.m. EST The Residence

The President: Hi, Bertie. How are you doing? Well, hell, I don't know exactly what I was told.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
Prime Minister Ahern:

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: It's naive for them to believe you can have a break or a pause or wait for Easter without this thing getting out. It's not possible. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

Prime Minister Ahern:

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: No, no, It's all right. Have you been up all night? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: You have problems. I gather you've been up. (U)

The President: Tony, what are you going to do the rest of the day? Are you going to bed? (U)
Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I may want to talk to you on a secure line later to tell you where I think things got off track a bit and what we need to do now. I don't have it all sorted out but would really like to talk to you, because we really cannot afford to be defeated on it. Let me talk to Gerry. The main thing is to let you publish this thing if you pause for reflection. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Let me call him back. (C)

Prime Minister Ahern: Goodbye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Joel Schrader, Miles Murphy, Jenny McGee and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE:
April 1, 1999, 7:03 - 7:12 a.m. EST
The Residence

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, hi Bill. (U)

The President: Have you talked to Adams since I talked to you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: No. (U)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d) (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Well done, Bill. (C)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: A week from Tuesday we'll have a celebration, but we'll probably need it by then. I never thought I'd ever be longing for the problems of Northern Ireland.

CONFIDENTIAL
Reason: 1.5(a,b,d)
Declassify On: 4/1/28
We had another bad night weather-wise. I should go out a little more. There was a good article in the New York Times. I don’t know if you saw it but it talked about what a good job you’ve done making the case in Britain. Although we’re at about 58 percent, but having these guys arrested and beat up may not be so good.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: The press today has got this big article saying the CIA tried to tell us he would accelerate his attacks if we hit him. Hell, we knew that but that’s an argument for having hit him 30 days earlier. I think we’re gonna have to talk to our allies on where we are.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Are you having to run all these targets by your Attorney General?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Holbrooke believes strongly we should be hitting the media, power grids, and oil stuff with little collateral damage. Shutting down the TV networks will have an impact.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: The refineries. I approved all that stuff. There is some chance of collateral damage, but it seems to me really remote.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We may need to examine if anything can be done in the daytime, too.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Tell you what I'll do. I have a meeting on this in about two hours time, and will fly down to Norfolk to see the troops, which I certainly need to do now that three of our guys have been apprehended. We are torn between doing something to keep the alliance unified or do something that works. I will check back in and call you later today. You and I have to talk this thing through.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Well. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm around anytime you want, Bill. (U)

The President: Thanks, Tony. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Alright. (U)

The President: Alright Tony, we'll talk. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
                Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Bob Ford, Sean Tarver, James Smith and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: April 1, 1999, 3:54 - 4:04 p.m. EST
                     Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Hi and excuse me. How are you doing? Did you get any sleep? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Not yet, but hoping to. God, these negotiations are a nightmare, but thanks so much for the help. (U)

The President: I hope I did help and Sinn Fein will start negotiations. The initial spin on it was okay. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: It looks like we got permission tonight from all the NATO guys to do most of what we wanted to do, but I wanted to say that I think we need better procedures here. They tell me Wes Clark is spending half or more than half his time every day trying to schmooze the Allies. There should be a more orderly way to pick the targets and vet them. (U)

But I don’t think we want to be in a position where every day you and I have to make six phone calls to ramp things up. (U)

SECRET
Reason: 1.5(a,b,d)
Declassify On: 4/2/99
Prime Minister Blair: No. (S)

The President: A lot of people knew what they were going to be and were preparing for them, so one of our fighter groups had to turn around and come back. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: My God. (S)

The President: That's why we keep this close. I am not accusing anybody, these are just the facts. But the more people that know, you increase exponentially the potential for leaks or intercepted conversations, anything of that kind. So we need to try to keep this closehold. (S)
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I will have Sandy follow up with your guys and we will figure out who contacts whom. We'll talk to Solana and get a new procedure approved. We need to approve targets quickly and hit them. We need to be relaxed about this, determined but relaxed. We're not in a panic.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: If it looks like we're afraid someone is going to wimp out on us, we would never get a decent deal.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We've unsettled him some. We've had some substantial strikes. We're not where we need to be yet, but we need to keep after it.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes. And it would be very well received here; we cannot act like we're bombing timidly and making a plea for peace. That's not a position we can afford to be in.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That we have to hit them harder. In fact, a couple of senators have come out in favor of ground troops. Though that could be a Trojan Horse.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We'll have our people come up with a strategy for who you and I should call. I will call Schroeder to see if he will agree to a new procedure on target setting. This is too slow; we are encumbered by weather now, but as a practical measure you will have more influence with Europeans than I will.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

We can't afford to have Clark spending half his day, every day trying to get approval to do his job rather than doing his job.
We're on an open line, so I don't want to get into details, but we have gotten in a position now where we can really, with the weather cooperating, do some more things and get some more results. I think it is quite important, and it's an acceptable agreement if we don't have to keep slashing away. We've got to show real strength and impact here.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Alright. Thanks.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I am happy to do it. It's lasted so long that I may miss it when it's gone. But I doubt it.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We'll have our people work out strategy. Goodbye.

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Joel Schrader, Miles Murphy,
Matthew Sibley, James Smith, Roger Merletti and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: April 5, 1999, 1:50 - 2:11 p.m. EST
Oval Office

The President: How are you? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: I'm okay.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I agree with that.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

this is important, it helps with the efficacy issue. (S)

SECRET
Reason: 1.5(a,b,d)
Declassify On: 4/9/05
Presentationally, I think you are right.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree absolutely.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: I agree with that, but I don’t think we are quite ready to say it.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree. You can be sure all these offers he makes will not meet that standard. More and more of the Europeans are of the mind that we may have some definitional problems down the road. I’d like to talk about two things that are related. One is the refugee issue. It seems to me we are doing a little bit better, with NATO taking the lead organizing with Macedonia and Albania. But we have got to do more and quickly in finding places to resettle them and the conditions of their return. Different countries have different conditions, camps.

I don’t know, but I know we have to create a release valve to take the pressure off Albania and Macedonia. We’re increasing economic assistance to countries bearing the greatest burden. I hope we can get as many concrete offers from others as we can, but the most important thing is to get those offers out now. We don’t want Albania and Macedonia to close their borders and cause a worse situation.
The other thing I wanted to mention is I am quite concerned about Russia's growing involvement. We have to make it clear we understand this is a political problem for them, and we don't mind them jumping on us, but they shouldn't have military support that will put our pilots and our forces at risk. We can't act as if there are no consequences to that.

Another issue that we're trying to work on is that surrounding countries need to thoroughly inspect all the Russian shipments going into Kosovo to make sure they are not violating the arms embargo. I am concerned about that. I think the military situation is in pretty good shape.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: This is an open line; we have to be careful what we say. You and I have discussed this before.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree with that. The problem we are having here is whether we're taking people in Guantamano or the continental United States, then they like it and say they don't want to go home. Will they want to go home, once they’ve seen London? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

The President: I understand the problem. On the other hand, we don’t close the borders to keep their countries from coming apart. Talk to your folks. On one level, I’d like to take 100 thousand and put them in America tomorrow and run the risk of saying people don’t want to go home. On another level, I don’t want any. They might like it here and not want to leave. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

The President: I agree with that. I wonder if our public affairs people should talk specifically to each other. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

The President: Let’s see if we can get this organized. It would make a huge difference. (C)

The President: Let’s have our own media people talking. We can offer to have all 19 join the conference call. If not, we ought to have the major countries agreed. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

The President: I couldn’t agree more. Okay, that’s good. (C)
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I do, too, but we have a ways to go. People can say to us you don't have a clear strategy, but we have had clear goals, but you have got to have the proper mix of long-term goals and enough flexibility to deal with day-to-day realities. Getting our presentation a little better has helped some, with the clearing of the weather, the targeting process being worked out. I thought your memo was terrific, by the way. \endnote{6}

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Absolutely. We've got that here. They would be calling people traitors, now they all join in. Everybody is a Monday morning quarterback. The right is saying you should have ground forces in there. Some people think I'm on the receiving end of a Trojan horse, that it's a deliberate set-up. But we have to take it as it comes and be determined we will not be defeated, that we will run this strategy out. But under no circumstances are we going to be defeated. If you tell me that, and I tell you that, and we hold hands. \endnote{6}

Now, let me say one other thing. We had good news on Lockerbie, with the suspects arriving in the Netherlands. Thanks for everything you did on that. This is great. We got the sanctions lifted, suspended for 90 days, but Libya will have to do more to get them lifted permanently. But this is a pretty good day for us since last August; it's a good argument for staying the course against terrorism in the long run. You going to follow up on the NATO PR thing and get back to us -- to Sandy or someone else -- to see how we coordinate our daily message? \endnote{6}

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. (U)

The President: Okay. Goodbye. (U)

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telephone Conversation with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
The Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Bonnie Glick, Matthew Sibley, Robert Ford, Robin Rickard, Lawrence Butler and K. C. Brown

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: April 10, 1999, 1:31 - 1:50 p.m. EDT
Residence

The President: Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi Bill. (U)

The President: Are you still in Scotland? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: No, I am back in Chequers now. I am here with Jose Maria Aznar. (U)

The President: Good. He is coming to see me in a couple of days. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: He was telling me to send you his best wishes. (U)

The President: Are they happy in Scotland? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, a lot happier in Scotland and you will be getting any amount of cashmere that you want. (U)

The President: What I want, is that when I am done here to be made an honorary UK citizen and give me a seat from Scotland next door to a good golf course. The daily papers today are filled with China being pissed off and Russia threatening war.
If you want, you can give me citizenship and make me a Brit. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: You are one very popular man there. (U)

The President: I hope that it helps in the elections. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It has helped. Thanks for seeing Donald Leu as well. What it has done is to emphasize to the people that sometimes it is useful to be part of something bigger.

The President: Yes, I believe that. We don't have time to talk about this today, but when you are here -- I want you to think about something between now and then -- we have to figure out how to resolve this stupid banana thing. But the real thing is that the Caribbean is in bad shape economically. I would like to get a bill through that would treat them like Mexico in exports. It would help them a lot if the United States, and if not the entire EU, then the French, Dutch, and British and everybody that had some presence there could think about setting up a joint effort for the long-term development strategy. We all have limited money, but if we coordinate it we could leverage it. Think about what we could do to help them diversify their economies. We could try to improve their economies, increase tourism and personal income, and reduce their vulnerabilities to the narco-traffickers. Get them to where they are not completely dependent on bananas. Anyway, there has never been anything like this in this part of the world where all the countries with ownership or colonization of these islands coordinated together. I think that this is a third way deal, and I bet we could get some other Europeans interested. I don't know if the French would help. The Dutch might be interested. Some of the Europeans might be interested. We might think about doing something like that.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That's right. The EU is wrong on the trade issue but right on the general concern for the Caribbean. The EU is in the right on the larger economic well being, on the longer-term interests of the Caribbean.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: In Central America they are all concerned, I was just down there and talked to all these guys. They are sensitive because of the hurricane. What few bananas they have, they want to sell. I told them we will help them get through this, but that we would have to diversify their economies too.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: The Central Americans and the Caribbeans sound like a boys school argument. They ought to be thinking about making common cause and not pissing down each others' leg to see who has the biggest bananas.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: OK, on Kosovo, just want to check in and reconnoiter where we are. We had greater military impact with the air actions. I think if we could do a couple more weeks I think that we could really have it. The G-8 statement is good. Have you received the report on the G-8 ministers? We are hoping to get a statement here involving the Russians.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That was good. Madeleine is going to see Ivanov on Tuesday or Wednesday. I also think that Kofi gave a good statement.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: He is a little miffed, though maybe that's too strong a word, disappointed maybe or concerned that neither of us have put out a statement on it. I told him that you were in Scotland and that I was preoccupied with the Chinese. I think that we ought to put one out now because he is out in Europe now. There are two things we need to think about. One is whether any economic pressures could be put on Milosevic that don't hurt the Macedonians and the Montenegrens too badly. I have a list of things, maybe cutting down on their money laundering in Cyprus and putting the squeeze on their London accounts. I don't want to cause the Montenegrins any trouble. I will get that list to you today and let you guys look at it. and respond to it. Any time that I try to get our banks to do something the Treasury Department gets squirrely on me. It is always a fight with those guys. I would like to send you this list and let you evaluate it.

We have to decide whether we want to have a more aggressive diplomatic initiative and if so, how to intensify the military action to enhance the likelihood that diplomatic efforts will succeed, assuming we can achieve all our objectives that Kofi signed off on and bring Russia into it.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d) It may turn out to be a bigger problem for me than you. It assumes that we can achieve our political objectives because Milosevic doesn’t want to get the hell bombed out of him and have Apaches on top of his tanks. If you assume -- the one downside is that we are facing a lot of hurdles -- if you assume that all of our stated objectives are achievable if we intensify our bombing campaign without actually toppling Milosevic. Then it seems to me that there will be some kind of diplomatic agreement for an international force that will include Russian participation. They will push Milosevic back when he says who can and cannot be part of it. I think that it will be difficult to have NATO as NATO participate. The problem this creates for us is Somalia.

I don’t want to take too much time going over this now but this is a big problem for us. We went through this in Somalia when the UN took over command and control. We had a messy deal during the first part of the Administration. We stayed on in Somalia when the UN took it over and it was a messy deal. I lost some American boys over there and one of them was dragged naked through the streets of Mogadishu. We made some mistakes there in what we did and did not do. We basically had serious command and control problems where the Americans were supposed to do two things -- the same things we’d have to do if it were a non-NATO force in Kosovo -- in Somalia we were supposed to be there doing humanitarian relief and act as a multinational peace force. One of the factional leaders who since has died, killed a bunch of Pakistani peacekeepers -- something like 15-20. We were the only presence there that had the capabilities to figure out who did it and to go and get him. So the UN wanted us and tasked us to go and get him, Aideed. The UN tasked us to do that while doing humanitarian relief. They tasked our guys to go into a hotel and get him. Our guys landed on the top of a hotel in the middle of the day -- he got away and then all of a sudden more than 300 Somalis started shooting at them. It is the sort of thing that if NATO had been doing it, it would have been totally different: there would have been different command and control arrangements, armor and artillery. So there is still a lingering bad taste. I have a lot of support in Congress right now. There is even more than before the Gulf War. More and more in Congress are saying that they are in favor of ground troops if we had to put them in there. And I am telling you this in advance, if you could help me on this because it is your guys’ necks, too. If they say NATO can participate, but not as NATO, instead as the UN, we have this awful memory of Somalia. We would also need the serious command and control issues to be worked out. We did not have these problems in Bosnia. It worked like a charm once NATO went in and the Russians came in with us. We only had to make an amendment to the NATO issue. Does that make sense?

Prime Minister Blair:

| E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d) |

The President: This was the lowest point of my presidency. It was a goddamned nightmare. I felt personally responsible for that kid’s body being dragged through the streets. So I see this as a practical measure about keeping people alive. We were prepared to take risks. We had all these glitches because of the command and control problems. The Russians are allergic to NATO and Milosevic is allergic to NATO. Keep in mind Tony, I know you know this, if we go in, we can’t go in with one foot. If we get a multi-national force we have to go in at least with the commitment to protect the Serbs in Kosovo at a minimum as well as the Kosovar Albanians. There is enormous grass roots support right now for the freedom fighters. This will be a big force protection issue -- command and control will be critical with huge political implications. We may have all kinds of problems where we have both sides pissed at us. They will be politically important as well in any country.

Prime Minister Blair:

| E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d) |

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d) I will send you the list of economic sanctions. We will look like assholes at the garden party if we don’t make sure that everybody understands that NATO means keeping our people alive. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: It is horrible. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: We need to talk on a secure line or talk when you get here. There are arguments both for it and arguments against it. We will need to look at in the context of where it is going to be five years from now. We need to keep our crowd together and keep at him and get a diplomatic solution with a mechanism that includes the UN and Russia. I will follow up on this. I am in the country all next week and will get that economic list out to you. Tell Jose Maria I said hello. Did you show him Napoleon’s pistol and Charles’ sword? (S)

Prime Minister Blair: I took him to Rothschild House today to see the most amazing works of art. (U)

The President: I want to get there. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: You must come back. (U)

The President: I will come back to the Scottish golf course. You were the best first-timer that I ever saw play. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Joking apart, thanks for cashmere. Let’s keep in touch. (U)

The President: Thank you, find me a safe seat in a golf cart. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Right, good-bye. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Jenny McGee, Roger Merletti, Frank Jarosinski, James Smith, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME: April 14, 1999, 1:56 - 2:14 p.m. EDT, Oval Office

The President: Hello, Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. This is a secure line, fortunately. Go on.

The President: Yes. First of all, I didn’t mean to take you out of a meeting there, but I thought it was important I talk to you as soon as possible. Aznar was here last night and he was really good, and I know he is there.

Wes Clark asked for another 300 airplanes, and we’ve got these Apaches coming in, but the truth is we’re just going to have more and more planes filling the air and restriking old targets or hoping the weather gets better so we can hit tanks and soldiers, unless we can get into Phase III targets. We have got to make these people start paying a higher price.

I was hoping while you’re there, you and Aznar could convince _____ to give Clarke and Solana the authority to strike a wider range of targets. That would require hitting national level headquarters, military-industrial targets, the TV towers (which he has resisted), some of the presidential targets, the power plants, the Socialist Party headquarters, which also has a radio-TV broadcasting facility there. I really believe we are making a mistake not turning the heat up on these guys.
I have also been urged by our people to look at preventative action against some targets in Montenegro. I know [REDACTED] doesn't want to hit there, but even [REDACTED] said there were some things we ought to be hitting. Let me give you an example or two: there are several facilities where we think they are moving in to take their missiles out; in and around the ports in Montenegro; there's one critical bridge we need to take out, before they start moving their military units. So we're quite worried about their ability to use these facilities. There are not a lot of targets and not a lot of risk of civilian damage,

But it's even more important we get to Phase III targets within Serbia. I know there'll be collateral damage and some controversy, but if we want any chance of a solution soon, we have to turn the heat up. [87]

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That's what I want to do. [87]
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I completely agree. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Let's talk about all the points you've made. First of all, we're agreed on targets. On fuel and other things, we are now banning Yugoslav ships from our ports and the export and reexport of goods to Yugoslavia. I hope you can succeed in tightening EU exports, freezing government and private projects and the assets of the leadership. You and I should propose NATO search ships going into Yugoslav ports to make sure there's no arms or fuel. SET

Prime Minister Blair: Agreed. (U)

The President: On presentation, Solana is not there, is he?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Do you want to send someone in? I think there would be some resentment if I sent an American over there. Maybe we should talk to Solana and have him ask for more help on presentation? Do you have someone you can deputize?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We've had to start doing a lot more of our briefings, because they are so ineffective.

Prime Minister Blair: They start off every day at 3 or 4 o'clock, and the press conference sometimes goes on for an hour or an hour and a half, literally answering all their questions.
The President: Shouldn’t we talk to Solana personally and get him to operationally, how do we get this done? What’s your suggestion?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I would support that strongly, and then he could do the conference call every day, your guy.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Okay. I am completely agreed. Should we call Solana separately or together. Separately. I will tell him we discussed this, I think your take is right and ask him to work with you on it.

Prime Minister Blair: That is great, Bill. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I will call you back.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That’s why I agreed to do this. With all the problems, I figured you wouldn’t have 19 elected officials with their asses hanging out to dry.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: You've got a deal. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Alright, Bill. (U)

The President: And on the economic things, you support them?

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely. One hundred percent.

The President: Alright. I will get on it.

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Matt Sibley, Tom Crowell, James Smith, Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME: April 14, 1999, 6:28 - 6:31 p.m. EDT
PLACE: Army-Navy Country Club

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. Right.

The President: Okay. Fine. I'll call him tomorrow. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We'll get clearance on that and go straight ahead. (EC)
The President: Good. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: On presentation and structure. I will speak to Solana tomorrow, and I think it would be good if you did, too.

The President: Do you want to call first? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'd be happy to do that.

The President: It's a deal. After you talk to him, have someone call our office and then I'll call him. That's great.

Prime Minister Blair: We'll speak soon. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT:    Telecon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair

PARTICIPANTS:  The President
               Prime Minister Blair

               Notetaker: George Chastian, Michael Manning, Liz Rogers, Roger Merletti, James Smith, Larry Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE:  April 16, 1999, 2:11 p.m. - 2:21 p.m.
                       Roseville, Michigan

Prime Minister Blair:  Hi.  This is a secure line, is it not? (U)

The President:  No, it’s really garbled.  I’ll call back if you want.  Let’s do what we can on the non-secure line and if you want to get into details, I can call you back secure.  (U)

Prime Minister Blair:  Yes, that will be fine.  Where are you? (U)

The President:  I’m in Detroit, on my way to a meeting with Albanian-Americans, and then I’m going to Boston, and then home tonight.  I was in San Francisco last night/yesterday, meeting with newspaper editors.  (U)

Prime Minister Blair:  Good for you.  (U)

The President:  I’m trying to rally support here.  (U)

Prime Minister Blair:  It’s tough, is it?  (U)

The President:  It’s coming around.  Americans are concerned but they’re basically supporting what we are doing.  That’s what I believe.  Nobody is going to treat this like a Sunday walk in the park until it’s over.  Yesterday was another good example of your insistence on a communication strategy. was a terrible thing, but in the Gulf War, we had soldiers killed by friendly fire where the Americans and British were. So even in a relatively small conflict, these kinds of things happen. We can’t lose the forest for the trees. "

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely right.

The President: That’s what I said yesterday. I was very strong with the newspaper editors -- you know I completely agree with you. We’re on the same page. We’ll get the briefing sorted out there.

Prime Minister Blair: I’ll tell you what I have done. I have done a note, which is longish, which sets out all my thoughts, concerns, suggestions on this, on everything we are doing. If it’s okay with you, I will fax it over to you on a secure fax.

The President: Good. Are we going to get together on Thursday? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I think. (U)

The President: Do you want to spend the night at the White House? Or at Blair House, if you want. I won’t get in until 1 a.m., and you may want to be in bed by then, but it’s your option. You can sleep in the same bed Churchill did. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I hope it’s appropriate. (U)

The President: As long as you don’t parade around naked before the bath. You’re too young and too trim. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I’m getting older in this bloody job. Bill, that is great, and then we can meet Thursday morning. I will get this information over to you.

I’m going there Tuesday to talk to people, and to SACEUR as well, to get a real fix on what is happening before the summit.

The President: That's a very good idea. When you come here, I'd like to develop a strategy on how to work with the others, including some of the smaller countries. I think a little effort on the side could get us a strong voice in making those folks feel included. Between the two of us, I think we can touch most people. ...all of that...

I probably need to call him.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That is what I think. In Detroit, we had 40,000 Albanians and a whole bunch of Serbs. The Albanians were outside demonstrating, and I said we have no fight with the Serbian people; they were our allies in World War II and most don't have a clue what Milosevic has done in their name in Kosovo. I said that was the proper way to express disagreement, not by killing. We have to be upbeat and resolute. It is important to be determined, but not too damned grim, either. We have to keep spirits up. We're in this world where people expect instantaneous results. We need to act like this started the day before yesterday and not twenty years ago.

Prime Minister Blair: I think that is right.

The President: If you want me to do any more, like talking to Solana or Wes Clark, let me know. I thought it would be less abrasive to everybody if I didn't lead the charge, and it seems to have worked out well; but I'll be happy to follow up.
Prime Minister Blair: Let me check with Solana.

The President: I'm sure that's right. There's no reason to believe these people are trained to deal with this situation.

Prime Minister Blair: That's totally right. This is a situation they haven't dealt with before.

The President: We will plan on being together on Thursday. You decide whether Blair House is more convenient. It probably will be for your retinue, but you can stay here and put another aide upstairs if you want.

Prime Minister Blair: That is really kind, Bill. I will get this note to you on secure fax, and probably we should have a word over the weekend on the secure phone.

The President: Alright, we'll do that. I understand we made a little progress on those operational changes you and I wanted and I am a little encouraged by that.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I think if we really work we can unblock any obstacles there. We still know where the difficult points are.

The President: We're finally getting some indication they're feeling it and there's a lot of internal debate within the high councils. That is important and we need to bear down. I will get your fax, and we will talk over the weekend.

Prime Minister Blair: Best of luck in Detroit. (U)

The President: I'll see you next week. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair
Notetakers: Doug Bayley, Miles Murphy, James Smith, Lawrence Butler and K. C. Brown

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: April 29, 1999, 5:22 - 5:43 p.m. EDT
Oval Office

The President: How are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine, how are you? (U)

The President: Great. I thought your trip went very well, and everyone loved the DLC event we did later. So I think your trip went great. I called to follow up a little bit on the memo you gave me and what we’re doing here. Let me make three or four points to respond to your memo and tell you what we are doing, then we can talk about whatever else we need to.

First, on your statement

We’ve got a small group working to develop an integrated strategic plan that will merge our military and strategic objectives and focus on putting pressure on Milosevic, his cronies, integrating military targets, covert action, psychological operations and public affairs. And it is my understanding we’re already in touch with you. We’ll have a detailed plan ready sometime this weekend and share it with your people. We will coordinate two to three times a week in a telephone conference with people in a group led by John Sawers and Sandy Berger. So, we’ll deal with that issue.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
affairs thing is in much better shape now; the war room you and I set up has a 24-hour capability and a rapid-response element, and I think Joe and Alistair are talking two or three times a day, including with the people in Brussels. I think that's good and we're trying to bring in the guy who used to work as my communications director to work our operation here for 30 days to make sure we've melded our political and diplomatic efforts together. On all those areas, we're doing pretty well. (8)

Prime Minister Blair: That sounds great. (U)

The President: The last item you raised is the need to do joint planning on the ground force option. I personally believe it can be done under the umbrella of the assessment. As I told you, we're working with our guys; they're so afraid it will leak. We have to work through it, because there's no point in doing this in detail unless we know how it will mesh together. I will keep working on that, but I think we've made reasonable progress on what we discussed and I wanted to see where you are on that. (8)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

If he means we won't assassinate him or bomb him or extract him from Serbia, I think we can make that commitment. I don't think we can make a public commitment on war crimes, because that is an independent body. Louise Arbour is here, by the way. (8)

I said we're cooperating with the tribunal, so that is a more difficult issue. He's looking for some assurance, but that's a pretty dicey thing. So, that's all I have to report. I do think Chernomyrdin has the bit in his teeth to do something, but whether he can, I don't know. They are very anxious to play a role in a diplomatic settlement and go in with their troops. (8)
One other point: the Russians might want to be in an area of Kosovo where the Serbs are dominant in population. I said I personally had no problems, as long as the Russians had a hard and fast commitment to protect the Kosovars. I had never discussed this with the American people, not one time, without saying that if the United States has a role, it will be providing protection to the Serb minority as well as the Kosovar/Albanian majority. (2)

The second thing -- and Sandy raised the red flag on this -- I asked him to make it clear to Chernomyrdin that having Russians and Greeks, Ukrainians, or other Orthodox denominations could not become a de facto partition, because the EU has taken a strong position on this, as has the United States and as has NATO. As long as there's no partition, I think we could work that out. Basically, that's a read-out of what D'Alema said.

Prime Minister Blair: Right. That is very helpful, Bill. First, I think on the bit with the press side, and NATO and SHAPE working together, we have a lot of people working well with your people. That is working better and will get better still. On the military side, I think that is great, to help SACEUR with what he is doing. On the video conferencing, I think that's fine. The thing to do is have a constant updating of all the different issues so they know exactly where we are, feeding through the information we are getting to your guys, and vice versa. (3)

The President: I agree. (3)

Prime Minister Blair: On the ground troop thing: I understand all the problems, and we don't want this to start running in the press and everything. We have done some work we are fairly confident of, and your guys will have to get in touch as you want, really.

So that is my only worry, is not to get caught by the winter. (3)

The President: Yes, I'm watching the calendar pretty closely. We're back to the efficacy argument here. The public in America, in the latest survey yesterday, is against ground troops; it supports bombing, but doesn't think it will work. I think whatever I decide is right, we can go forward with. I think what we don’t want to do is not do what we need to do in terms of planning. They’re asking when this will be over. I looked at the weather map and said, “May is better than April, and June is better than May, and July is better than June.” That had the right effect. It wasn’t lost on them, to talk about how the weather is getting better.

Prime Minister Blair: I think it is important, also.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I don’t know. I just don’t know. We have to wait and see. We may have to talk again before the weekend is over, when we see how he does. We’ll have to wait and see. My guess is Milosevic will offer a little more tomorrow, but not enough, and then come back and say, “How about a pause in bombing?” He’s still trying to stiff the Alliance.

I want you to think about two things with your planners, if you’ve got a pretty good military plan now on the ground troop option. There are two things. Life is not perfect, but I basically had three objectives going in: one is to win in Kosovo, to have the people come back to a protected area and give them autonomy and then to have the larger approach to southeastern Europe that we discussed.

The second thing is, to get from beginning to end with the NATO alliance intact. When you think about it, this is the first thing NATO has had to do in 50 years. In Bosnia, we had a lot of help on the ground from Croatian and Muslim forces; we didn’t have to do as much as we do here.

The third thing is, I was so happy about Chernomyrdin being back in harness. In talking to all our people, I’ve said that I want this to come out in a way that enhances Russia’s diplomatic role and strategic partnership with us. That would be a real boost to the forces of progress and those who want a partnership with us, rather than those who want to go off by themselves angry, hurt and humiliated. (8)

One thing you need to have your best Russia people dealing with: if it comes to a troop option, what the hell are we going to do with Russia if it leads to the collapse of our relationship.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: My view on this is,

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I agree with that. How about Ireland? Where are you?

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Do you think the IRA has decided they are never going to decommission?

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The poll shows more people are in favor of the Good Friday agreement than at the time of the referendum. People just want this damn thing to happen.

The President: They're tired of screwing with it, aren't they?

Prime Minister Blair:

Anyway, we will keep on it. I think the next two weeks is pretty crucial and I am just thinking about what big thing we can do. I am going to Macedonia and Romania for a few days next week to visit our troops and also to address the Romanians. When I come back, I will do a couple of days on the Irish thing.

The President: Great. I go to Germany next week. Germany is the one country where we have people flying and doing humanitarian operations and there are refugees, and Schroeder has the EU Presidency. My guys asked me not to go down to Aviano because it would be too disruptive, so I'll honor that.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I think Germany is just the right place to go next week. If you give a message of public support, it will be very important.

The President: Yes, He's been good to stay with us. There's a big article in the paper today, "Germans Seek to Separate Serb Leader From Support." It's in The New York Times. I can't tell, but it looks like they're trying to set him up for war crimes. I want to talk to Gerhard about it. I'll have somebody fax that to you.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay. Just before we go. Three things our people should think about.
The President: I agree. I will get on all of them and talk to you. If you want to talk over the weekend, I'm available. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks for the weekend. (U)

The President: Okay. Goodbye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Doug Bayler, Bonnie Glick,
Roger Merletti, James Smith and K. C. Brown

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 4, 1999, 1:29 - 1:48 p.m. EDT
Oval Office

The President: Hello, Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. How are you? (U)

The President: How did you do on your trip? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It was good. It was extraordinary, really. They've got a lot of problems in the refugee camps, and I am trying to help them set up another in Macedonia. Things are pretty difficult there, because the refugees keep coming in. But no, it was good. And the thing with the Romanian parliament went well. It was good. We have also got good contacts with the Kosovar people now. I met some leading people there, and they've got quite a formidable network there, so we tapped into all that. How are you doing? How are you getting on? (U)

The President: Fine. I met yesterday with Chernomyrdin for a long time, then he met for an even longer time with Al Gore last night, and Sandy, and then they met again this morning. I think that Chernomyrdin's involvement is a chance to move Belgrade toward our position, but we need to get Moscow moving in that direction. I explained to him what was necessary for this to be a success. I told him we need a timetable on withdrawal, as well as a commitment to an international security force. We said he has to commit to get all his forces out, then we can talk about a presence symbolic of Serbian sovereignty.

We had a long talk about the rationale for an international security force with NATO at its core and the rapid deployment capability, to keep the Serbs and Albanians from clashing. I do think he understands that if we are not in there, the peaceful Albanians won’t go back and the guerrillas will, and we’ll all be back where we are in six to eight months. I think he understands.

The only other thing is, the G8 political directors yesterday was pretty good, except they talked about an international presence authorized by the UN.

But Madeleine is trying to have it redrafted to avoid any implication that we’re undermining the common requirements of NATO. That is kind of where the diplomacy is. Sandy and the rest of the Foreign Policy Team will review this 30-day strategic campaign plan -- and I got your message the other day -- and we’ll share it with you. And we’re making the arrangements for the secure video teleconferencing between our teams. So, we’re kind of rocking along here. But I’m concerned with Milosevic’s peace initiative and his release of the POWs and the collateral damage, which is getting publicity. I’m worried about Allied unity. I feel good about continuing this for months, if necessary, but we’ve got to keep everybody else in harness. Milosevic is in more trouble than we think, or he wouldn’t be going to all this trouble to stop the bombing.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: What do you think?
Prime Minister Blair: I agree entirely. First, the military campaign is going a bit better, and I think it’s beginning to do real damage. Taking out the power stations and blacking out Belgrade really made a difference.

The President: They were too wimpy on the NATO thing. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: You’ve just got to be careful. I think it’s necessary to have constantly -- and I am trying to get it sorted at this end -- people who go up and talk to those refugees -- everyone has a horror story to tell. The most horrible things have been going on in there. I don’t know whether public opinion in other countries is different -- ours is pretty solid -- but most people, if they think the campaign is beginning to work, will hold with it. (S)

The President: Also, there is going back, and there is going back. If they don’t think it’s strong and reliable and gives them autonomy, even if you and I were there, we would have a problem with the military elements. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: I agree. But, Bill, what is your frank assessment about how much damage we are prepared to do in the next month to two months?
The President: I agree with that.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I think we should stick where we are. The Europeans feel strongly about it. I don't feel strongly, I could go either way, but I have been publicly strong about leaving it in the country, because I don't want to be accused of having a campaign for a greater Albania and disrupt the front-line states. I think we ought to hang in there. The rest of the EU have been pretty adamant against independence and we ought to hang in there with them on that.

Prime Minister Blair: True.

The President: First of all, I strongly agree with that, and we hammered Chernomyrdin on that. Let me tell you how I look at this; I think it might also be helpful on the presentational aspect in Europe. I rarely talk about Kosovo now that I don't talk about Bosnia. It took us almost four years to get that together and get Dayton. We defeated ethnic cleansing, but we did not reverse it, because so many refugees were not going home. The Kosovars have to be able to go home. We not only have to defeat it, we have to reverse it. When I remind people of our work in Bosnia, I think it reinforces it. I've got a full-time person now doing nothing but Kosovo public affairs and getting these stories out. What I think we need to look at is, either we should have some more of those people -- should we put more people on it? It's delicate; it's in other countries where this problem exits. I don't want to mess on people's turf. Maybe talk to D'Alema and others about it. It would help if there were more of these people in the Italian press and other countries that are getting a lot of pressure, in the Spanish and Portuguese press and others.

Prime Minister Blair: Is your thinking that public opinion is going soft in those countries?

The President: I think it's softer in those than ours and I don't know if they have a strategy for dealing with it.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

On the bombing campaign, one thing I hope will happen, now that we have hit and taken out most of the bridges, I think we may be able to focus more on power systems. And, looking at all hours at more military targets, that will reduce further horror stories about collateral damage, like the bus that got hit on the bridge. That is, we can do more, more freely and with fewer civilian problems.

One thing I said here that sends a good message, that shows our resolve: I just comment on the weather, that the weather is better in June than in May and July is better than June. All you've got to do is say that. Psychologically, it's a very good thing to say, and I've said it a couple of times.

One or two other things -- we're going to open another camp in Albania, like you are in Macedonia. If it appears we've been too reluctant here and we haven't done enough there, this thing could spin out of control on us and collapse our timetable. We don't want opponents to be able to say we didn't do enough there, so we've got to bring them here. We just have to work on it. I leave this afternoon for Belgium and Germany, so I'll check with you when I get back, or maybe while I'm there. I'll see Dehaene and Schroeder.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, the Macedonian situation with the refugees is very worrying. We're trying to get unblocked some European money. I talked to Michel Camdessus about the IMF position on Macedonia. I'm trying to get Macedonia to agree to a big transit camp to drain off the problem, and we're also taking some more ourselves. But I think we really have to watch Macedonia.

The President: I do, too. I'm worried about the politics of Macedonia. The government could collapse and consensus could disappear. The country is so small and so poor. These numbers could change that. (S)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Good for you. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: We've got to just manage them through this.

Kosovo is about the size of the county of Yorkshire in England, that is, it's not small, but it's not vast: it's not unimaginably large.

The President: I agree, there is a chance of that. (S)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That's bullshit, and we know it. We want, obviously if we could, to get out where Russia plays a bigger role and a positive role. That will reinforce the position of the progressives within Russia and stabilize the situation and have a good lead into the 2000 elections. I also think it will help us keep the Alliance together.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

If we can achieve our objectives of having defeated and reversed ethnic cleansing and kept the Alliance together -- with the ties between Russia and the West stronger, not weaker. That might be too much to hope for. (S)
Prime Minister Blair: That would be a full hand. It would be a great thing to achieve.

That's where the people are on this.

The President: I agree.

Prime Minister Blair: Hillary is going to the camps, is she?

The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair: Her presence and the pictures that will come out of that -- all the time, we've got to repersuade people, remind them, really. You know the public attention span. We had a terrible nail bomb thing going off in London, but for four days, Kosovo ceased to be in people's minds. We have to persuade them about it. Littleton happened and obviously the whole of America starts to refocus.

The President: We didn't want Jesse to be able to bring out those soldiers, because people would feel we had to do a good turn. I mean, we got three guys going home, but a million can't go home.

Prime Minister Blair: It's a constant, constant business. Her going to the camps will make a big difference. When you go and talk to them, then you realize what you have to do.

The President: Alright, my friend. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Have a good time in Germany. Speak to you soon. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation. --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Joel Schrader, Jenny McGee, Miles Murphy and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 8, 1999, 3:26 - 3:46 p.m. EDT
Air Force One

The President: Tony, can you hear me? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, you’re on Air Force One are you? (U)

The President: Yes. This was a “great” day wasn’t it? 😎

Prime Minister Blair: I am afraid these things happen. 😎

The President: That’s what I said too. 😎

Prime Minister Blair: It is bad, but we have just got to steady our nerves on it, really. 😎

The President: Yes, that’s what I did. I just went out and made a statement saying that we hit several important command and control targets, and that the damage to the Chinese Embassy and the deaths and injuries were completely inadvertent. I extended deep regrets to the people and the leaders of China but said it is important to remember why the strikes were necessary and how to put an end to them. 😎

They asked about the Chinese and Russian reactions and whether it could derail the diplomatic efforts we’re making toward a peace deal. I said I hoped not because that was the quickest way to get it over with and I restated the conditions and pointed out that we’d done over 10,000 sorties and because TV is

Reason: 1.5 (a, b, d).
Declassify On: 5/10/09.
in Belgrade, they could cite every time there’s unintended consequences, but our pilots have literally risked their lives to avoid hitting innocent civilians in Serbia -- shot at from rooftops and in the middle of civilian areas, they have not responded. They have done everything they could to dodge the weapons and go on. We have to remember what caused these strikes and what could end them, but our conditions have to be met. No one would like to stop them more than me.

Prime Minister Blair: That is absolutely right. The TV cameras are not in Kosovo but if they were, they would be seeing people killed every day by Serbs, by Milosevic.

The President: Yes. If we had one TV picture of the 15 men being roped together and burned alive, they would be demanding that we bomb the hell out of them, people would be wondering why we haven’t leveled the place, but our people need to be telling that to the media all the time.

Prime Minister Blair: What I did today was to get the NATO conference to go through all the atrocities in the last two weeks in Kosovo. We did a press conference on the same theme. I understand when something like this happens, people get very nervous about it, but day after day after day, things are happening without any cameras and no one reports a bit of it. Milosevic can take the cameras to wherever he likes and point to these things. But in Kosovo this is a daily happening, as a result of deliberate policy, not as an accident.

The President: I am with you. I just wanted to check in to make sure we’re on the same page.

Prime Minister Blair: No doubt, Bill. I’m sure you’ve said the right thing.
The President: That is right. They asked, "What about the Russians and Chinese saying this was barbaric?" I said it was not barbaric but a tragedy. We ought to take that word and turn it on them.

Prime Minister Blair: You are absolutely right.

The President: Let me ask a couple of questions. In Germany, I did what you suggested. I did an hour interview with the press people from Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Macedonia and Albania. Did it get press coverage?

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely, it got a lot of coverage.

The President: I think we all need to do more of that, reaching into other countries. One other thing, when I was there, I did a lot of spade work with our people working on humanitarian stuff about Macedonia, with the view as quickly as possible of turning Macedonia into a way-station and you know telling them we would move all of the refugees through there. We would need to get Turkey to agree to take about 100,000, get safe passage for them to Turkey. I believe we have enough money to do this. If my supplemental passes the Senate this coming week, and I think it will, what we would like to do is go to Turkey, with whatever help we get from Europe, and build these camps. We could build camps for 20,000 which are quite comfortable with public space, schools. They are tents, but nice tents. Also, if worse comes to worse, they can be winterized with wooden floors and heaters. They would be quite adequate. Obviously, it would be better to get them to Turkey anyway because the climate is better.
Then we could build a couple of camps in Macedonia; it would be easier to secure a throughway if we could get them direct cash to the government in a hurry -- which you could do quicker than me through the EU -- then tell them we want to make Macedonia a throughway, not permanent stops for refugees. We will be able to get the numbers manageable and stabilize this thing in the next few weeks. If they know where we were going, they'd do a lot better to hold and fend off domestic opponents.

Prime Minister Blair: I totally agree. That is an excellent idea and I will do everything to facilitate it. I spoke to Santer about getting European money released. The critical priority is to get money as quickly as possible that will buy their goodwill for forward transit to Turkey. We need to talk to Greece as well, but that is an excellent idea and exactly what we need to be doing.

The President: When does Prodi take over?

Prime Minister Blair: It's not quite clear, not for a couple of months. I should think we need to get Santer to work on that.

If necessary, we can get the money ourselves and then get it back from the EU. They really need money quickly. I will speak to Santer in the next couple of days.

The President: If I get my money this week, I will ship some too.

Prime Minister Blair: If I get the money there, we'll have the goodwill to facilitate all of this. I totally agree this is the right thing to do if Turkey is willing to do it.

The President: We can put these camps up in a hurry for 20,000 people for about $20 million by the time you clear the land, work sewage, water and all that. That is $1,000 a person, that's not all that much.

Prime Minister Blair: When you consider weapons and everything, it is a pretty sensible investment.

The President: I will work on this and get your guys in touch with our guys. We have to get money to Macedonia and Turkey to take 100,000, build transit camps in Macedonia that are physically separate and secure a commitment to build camps in Turkey and then get safe passage. We also need to get money to Albania. They’ve taken a lot in homes now, but we need better camps now. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: Right. We need to watch in Albania, particularly because a lot of refugees are living with families and are not getting any support.

If necessary we can do it ourselves with Germany and France and get it back from the EU. (S)

The President: The EU Parliament doesn’t have to vote on it. Does it? (S)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What if you got a letter from every EU member to Santer saying release it tomorrow? Would it help? (S)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, it would help. In the end, we should probably just give them the money ourselves and then get it back from the EU. (S)

The President: Do we need to call anyone else about this incident with China to buck them up? (S)

Prime Minister Blair: I was going to speak to D’Alema anyway. (S)

The President: Okay, I will call Jacques. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: I still think that in the end, the public understands that in war these things happen. We have this operation in NATO and SHAPE working better now.

The media is just bored with pictures of refugees. We need actual pictures of what is happening in Kosovó. (S)

The President: Okay, I will work on that. I don’t have any great ideas but I’ll work on it. (S)
Prime Minister Blair: There are ways we could do it. We are looking at, but I think people, all the time, need to be reminded of the basic principles. When I went to Macedonia and saw those people, any doubt immediately leaves you. What has happened to these people is just dreadful. We need to make all the right diplomatic moves, but just carry on.

The President: I'm with you. Where are we on Ireland?

Prime Minister Blair: We got a little bit of a breakthrough last week, because Sinn Fein came up with far more positive language. I have a totally different proposition which is based on words rather than product and now I have to say to them you may not get product, but you may get better words.

Sinn Fein may say, "you've got better words, we want an answer tomorrow." For six months, we've been trying to get better words. You can't rush. We actually had a good series of meetings at Downing on Thursday and there is some possibility there.

But we're not quite yet at an absolute critical moment. When it is at a critical moment, if you are willing to do so, to help. It may take in the end, a high profile intervention in this.

The President: Yes. I will do whatever you want me to do.

Prime Minister Blair: I know Bill. You've been fantastic on this. I will try to bring this to a boil next week and will keep in touch.
The President: I'll keep working on all of this and if I need to call you again I will. (O)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay Bill. (U)

The President: Thank you. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Jenny McGee, Joel Schrader, Miles Murphy, Sean Tarver, Roger Merletti, James Smith and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 27, 1999, 10:10 - 10:22 a.m. EDT

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. How are you? (U)

The President: I am fine. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: So. What's happening? (U)

The President: How's the indictment going down over there? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I agree with that. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

So, anyway, I sent you a note setting out my thoughts. I don't know whether it's reached you yet, I just finished it this morning, but I think the situation is, we are doing a lot of damage, but I think we're right to be stepping up the pressure. We've got to be.

The President: This planning process has got to proceed, because we only have a few days before deciding what else to do but I think 45,000 troops for KFOR is quite good. The more people we have deployed in the area, the more quickly we can move. I agree entirely with you; we obviously can't afford to lose and have to keep doing everything necessary to make him think that we're ready to intervene and no matter what we can't afford to lose. But the combination of the impact of last week's strikes and the fact that the NAC has voted to let NATO increase the number of targets that will be hit and the nature of them and the buildup will give us maximum pressure. I agree with you, I don't care what happens to him, whether he stays there or goes somewhere as you've said, like Belarus, it's all right with me if we get our objectives met.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: I agree with that.

Prime Minister Blair: Because you save lives by doing that. I think we are in just about the right frame and it probably hasn't reached you yet, but I have set out in a note what I think you can do if we have to go a step further -- how you would explain that and how you would take people with you. You can set it in a bigger vision for the Balkans and how it's good for people.

Prime Minister Blair: I think he would.

The President: He has been very tough on this so far.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, he has and I think they will come along with us. The problem is, until you see a real plan,
I think we need to let this thing percolate for a day or two and see what the reaction in Serbia is. There's some chance it will be helpful, and there is a chance that it will be harmful; I would be surprised if it had no impact. So I think we'll see something fairly soon.
The President: Yes, I agree with that. Hillary and I are taking a couple of days off, and I am mulling that over right now. My gut feeling is that I have to give something sooner rather than later. Unless it cracks in two or three days, it's better to say something very strong, that we have no intention of losing this. Now the good news about the indictment, Tony, is that makes it less forgiveable for us to lose it. No one can say, "Oh well, they're just nationalists." I think it is interesting that apparently the whole indictment is premised on Kosovo and shows a systematic government policy. I thought in the beginning that if she (Louise Arbour) did do this, some might be based on his role in the Bosnia slaughters. But apparently it's all based on Kosovo. It's quite interesting. And apparently -- I haven't seen it, but apparently it says that it's more than chain of command, it's specific personal things he ordered, not that he was just the head of the apparatus. This will be quite helpful in making that case. I agree with you, but this is making it impossible for everyone to walk away and making him see people are not going to walk away.

Prime Minister Blair: I think that is right. As I say, you haven't got this yet --

The President: I just got it. I just read it. Just this second.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Good. Well, I will be back in a few days and get back with you on that, and we'll keep our fingers crossed. I think the NAC did the right thing by approving a new range of targets.
Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I think it has been a good few days.

The President: Alright, I will talk to you soon. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Alright, Bill, all the best. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President

Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Doug Bayley, George Chastain, Frank Jarosinski, Miles Murphy, Don Cheramie and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: June 3, 1999, 6:42 - 6:57 p.m. EDT Oval Office

The President: Hi, Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Let's hope it sticks. (U)

The President: Yes, I hope it will. I think you and I gave the best answer. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Here (Cologne) it's like trying to stamp down a bush fire. (U)

The President: There are a lot of unanswered questions. Maybe 72 hours from now we can celebrate, but we will all look stupid if it turns into a red herring by Milosevic. My response today was "welcome, but cautious." (U)

Prime Minister Blair: As I said tonight, of course, the fact that we got an agreement was great news, but it has to be done, it has to be implemented and some tricky questions have to be answered in the right way.

The President: I agree. I turned up the heat at my Air Force Academy speech. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely, I think it's critical what you've been doing.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We have a new problem, but we should be careful on this line. Sometime in the next 72 hours I need to talk to you about the planning process. Do you think over the next 72 hours we can talk about this? Do you think we could talk secure over the weekend?

Prime Minister Blair: Sure. (U)

The President: Just tell them they can dance around a Maypole — you'll hold it up for them while they dance.

Prime Minister Blair: We should only rejoice when the refugees go home.

The President: He's been a champ. Chernomyrdin has been good too and for the Russians this is good too. They have come out well.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I think it is a good thing for Russia. They came out extremely well.

The President: It makes them look like a world leader. They don't want to snatch defeat from the jaws of victory. This should help them with their economic stabilization.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

He is getting a lot of criticism at home.

Prime Minister Blair: I mostly agree with that. Absolutely right, people tonight are talking far more positively about them and asking what we can do to help the Russians in economic terms. It really changes the atmosphere there, doesn't it?

The President: Yes, it certainly does. The other thing that they and the Serbs should think about is that this saves us a hell of a lot of money that can be used on development, the money we would save from putting in a ground force. Also, the main thing we need to do is look like we remain determined.
Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely right. I think, as well, that the stronger message is our support for a democratic Serbia.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d) I think that is helpful the more it is emphasized. So there we are, Bill. [\textendash]

The President: Let's try to talk over the weekend about planning. I need to get your thoughts. We need to talk about it and get planning. [\textendash]

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, several of us made public statements tonight. I've done it too tonight with the CNN people. Without you and America, this show wouldn't have happened at all. [\textendash]

The President: The main thing we all need is to stay strong. We need to share the responsibility for the credit as well as the blame, and we can all dance if we get it done. I did call Schroeder and make the same argument. [\textendash]

Prime Minister Blair: I was having a bit of trouble with it, but I think that we are right on it. [\textendash]

The President: I don't want Milosevic to think that we are so hooked on this deal. [\textendash]

Prime Minister Blair: About the success -- I am absolutely delighted, but only when it is complete.

The President: I have made a bunch of deals with this guy over the years. The Dayton Accords is the only one he kept and he kept that because we had bodies on the ground. [\textendash]

Prime Minister Blair: We shouldn't forget and people shouldn't forget what this guy has done.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: We've got 12,000 troops there now so we can start moving; but then we need a lot of logistics in the move, assuming the agreement works. [\textendash]

Prime Minister Blair: The important thing is to get the NATO military people to start immediate planning to get some verifiers going out. [\textendash]
The President: Apparently, they are meeting on Saturday. He wanted to wait until Sunday probably to find out how much wiggle factor, wiggle room he had. They pushed for Sunday and we pushed him back to Saturday.

Prime Minister Blair: There is no reason they can't meet tomorrow from NATO's point of view.

The President: Saturday is the earliest day we can get Wes to meet them.

Prime Minister Blair: This is the quickest we could get the Serbs to meet.

The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair: I don't like that very much.

The President: We may know Sunday or Monday where we are. Maybe you and I could talk on Sunday. I need to talk to you about the other option. There is good news and bad news.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill.

The President: Okay. Keep your fingers crossed.

Prime Minister Blair: Right.

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Bonnie Glick, Michael Manning, Miles Murphy and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME and PLACE: June 6, 1999, 12:32 - 12:42 p.m. EDT
Camp David, Maryland

The President: Hi, Tony. How are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm anxious until this thing is properly tied down. (U)

The President: This is exactly what I was afraid of. A bombing pause and then they would try to steal the peace now that we have won the war. The position is that the Russians and Chinese won't let a Security Council Resolution go through until there is a bombing pause, but we won't pause unless there is clear evidence of withdrawal. Funny, but I understand the Serb position; they don't want a vacuum so when their withdrawal starts, they want us to come in. Yesterday, our guys said "you begin withdrawal, we will pause and try for one day to get a Security Council Resolution. If the Chinese and Russians won't, we'll get a NATO accord and move in immediately." (S)

That was our position yesterday. Today, the Serbs came back and said they couldn't live with this. They want a Security Council Resolution that links the authority to deploy and the authority to run the country under the UN; if there is a delay, we'll return to our pre-conflict force levels before we invaded until the Security Council works it out. That's a nightmare and we can't let that happen. They're trying to steal the peace after we won the conflict. I know you agree with that. I am going to

SECRET
Reason: 1.5(a,b,d)
Declassify On: 6/7/09
call D'Alema. I don't know what to do except tell our guys to hang tough. Ahtisaari delayed his China trip. (8)

Prime Minister Blair: I just talked to Ahtisaari. (8)

The President: What did he say? (8)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I'm not against that. (8)

Prime Minister Blair: I said I wanted to think about that and talk to you. If we ask him, he would go do that tonight.

The President: Good for him. (8)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes. (8)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair: What do we lose? My guy down there, Michael Jackson, is a good bloke, but he is a general not a negotiator. (8)

The President: I think Ahtisaari made a good impression on Milosevic. I haven't talked to Sandy, Madeleine or anyone about him going down. But I worry about this thing dragging on. I'm not worried about sending a signal; we need to get this going while the iron is hot. (8)

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely, I'm in total agreement on that. (8)

The President: You talk to your guys. I'll talk to mine. (8)
Prime Minister Blair: I told Martti I'd get back to him in an hour. If we want to have a chat to our folks and have them chat..

The President: I agree. I've been waiting for this. I've been nervous as hell all day. We can't let him take the peace away from us.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree 100 percent.

The President: We owe it to these people (the Kosovars), and don't forget that they (the Serbs) are asking us to eat a hell of a lot of shit. Now that they want us to sweep out Thaçi and the KLA and give this Authority five years to work, our crowd is going to be at some physical risk too. We have to think down the road here. Look at Bosnia four years later. We're taking on a lot of water here. If we can spring some money from the IMF and the World Bank... but there are all kinds of hurdles with that. Well, you and I are in the same place. We can't let our folks get weak on this. If the Europeans stay hitched on this, we should be okay in a day or two. I might give Chretien a call too. He has a lot of friends over there in Europe. I know he agrees with us. We may have to do some hand holding on this.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree.

The President: I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll call Sandy now and talk to our guys and then I'll try to call D'Alema, and decide who else I should call. If there is any other problem, I'll be available. It's sunny here. I may go out, but I'll have phones with me.
Prime Minister Blair: I have some people I really trust out there at the negotiations. Okay, our people will be in touch.

President: If this thing is going to be drug out for another 72 hours or so, we may also need a story about how our planning is continuing. We have to put a squeeze on and we can't let them get the peace. Okay, we have a vigorous agreement going here, so we don't need to waste time. I'll talk to Sandy and we'll be in touch. Goodbye.

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Tony Campanella, Michael Manning, Robin Rickard, Roger Merletti and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: June 7, 1999, 9:55 - 10:06 a.m. EDT
Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hi Bill. Now do you want me to tell you what I know? (U)

The President: Yep. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: The talks broke off. What I mean? (U)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Yes. [8]

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes. I completely agree with everything you’ve said. The key here is where the Russians are on this.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

just have to be tough as hell with them. I am completely in accord with where you are. [8]

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Yep. We are in the same place Tony, and we've got to tough it out and get a good UN draft. Maybe I am super sensitive, but let me say something.

Prime Minister Blair: OK Bill.

The President: I am going to call Yeltsin as soon as I hang up with you.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree to that. Do you think the Allies will hold to it?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. I spoke with Schroeder this morning.
The President: Alright. Let's hang in there. If anything develops tonight I might call you. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: I might trouble you again if I get a firm readout on the Russians. If there is something we need to talk about then we can talk again. (S)

The President: OK. Thank you. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Alright. All the best. Thank you. Good-bye (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Matt Sibley, Robert Ford, George Chastain, Sean Tarver, Jim Smith, Roger Merletti and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: June 10, 1999, 9:09 - 9:27 a.m. EDT
Oval Office

The President: Hey, I just called to say thanks, it's been a good run. Life's greatest curse is the answer to our prayers; now we have to figure out how to get all those people back in, without getting blown up by all those landmines. I had Elie Wiesel here -- do you know him? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. (U)

The President: He's a Holocaust survivor, and an advisor. I sent him to some of the camps, and he said, "boy, there is so much anger there. Every Kosovar believes he knows the Serb who ousted him." (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, it's going to be tough, isn't it? I tell you what, it could be a lot worse. (U)

The President: Well, it's quite wonderful. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: At least now it will be a problem of construction instead of destruction. (U)

The President: We've just got to hold everybody together and keep working on it. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: line drops, and is reestablished. (S)

The President: Hey, Tony, I'm sorry. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: No, no, it's our fault. I'll have the person who dropped the line executed. (U)

The President: [Laughs] We're trying to think through the obvious questions, about how fast we can get people back in and clear out the landmines, and we need to flush out Macedonia first. (R)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yeah, we have to keep working on that. (R)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I am, too. There are not a lot of places he can go, given his indictment by the war crimes tribunal. Maybe Russia or Belarus would take him, or maybe he'd get a Pinochet deal and leave him in Serbia. (R)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yeah, we can't do that. We need to look at basic humanitarian conditions, and make sure the lights are on by winter.
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We have to do that, too. Frankly, I don't know what else I can do. I've been reading about it all through this, because my daughter just happens to be doing a paper on Adams. I don't know what the real deal is between him and the IRA. It's hard to put pressure on him when you don't know what's going on. It's just bizarre.

We've got to keep working on it, and I'll do whatever you want me to do.

Let me say this: we sent out our top people to NATO for Kosovo, we need to do the same thing with getting the refugees back and setting up a government. Whatever the formal structure, we have to put our best people in to set up the mechanics and make this thing work. There are literally thousands of detail questions that we have to answer.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: The major concern I have about the person on top is I want someone with confidence and energy to do this thing. I want someone to go there and stay.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: The commander of the overall military is going to be British, isn't he? I think he's good. I haven't met him, but I've seen him on TV.
The President: Anyway, this won't require our obsession like the battle, but it will require our attention for the next 10 days.

Prime Minister Blair: Right, well, Bill, you'll be over for the Cologne meeting?

The President: Yeah, when we come to Cologne, we should have major questions to answer as a body. We need to boost Yeltsin and his pro-reform forces. I wish we could resuscitate Chernomyrdin, and I realize this may be more water than we can carry.

I'd like to have him and Ahtisaari there to receive our thanks. We may want to think about this. They did a hell of a job for us. I think we also ought to think about some other things at Cologne. We need to have good positions coming out of Cologne for debt relief, and because of compound interest and falling incomes, I think it will be a big deal there. We also need to do more on the AIDS issue. According to our people, one percent of the people in the world have AIDS.

Prime Minister Blair: In Africa the numbers are staggering, and in a country like South Africa it's just massive.

The President: And you've got 60 million people more or less, and 35 million in Africa, and the number is going to double in the next four years.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yeah, let's see where they are with the World Bank. Russia collapsed politically and economically after 1995. It also deteriorated with Yeltsin's health problems even though he was reelected in 1996.

[Line drops and is reestablished.]

The President: Hi, Tony. You need to go to the press now. Solana is on TV. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Right, I'm sorry about that. Okay, yes. Let's speak before Cologne. (U)

The President: Yeah we need to talk. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Right, let's talk again before Cologne. (U)

The President: Okay. Goodbye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS:
The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Jenny McGee, George Chastain, Robert Ford, Joel Ehrendreich, Jim Smith, Roger Merletti

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: June 21, 1999, 2:26 - 2:33 p.m. EDT
Ljubljana, Slovenia

Prime Minister Blair: Hello, Bill. (U)

The President: Hey, Tony, I called to tell you I'm sorry about your soldiers. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks very much. It's very kind of you to call. We're still trying to find out the details. (U)

The President: Tony? (U)

[Call dropped and reestablished.]

The President: You're still trying to get the news? All I've seen is what's on CNN. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We don't know how much more than that at the moment. It appears one of them was a sergeant, and they were trying to demine a school, and a mine went off. I'm afraid we're going to see quite a bit of this before it's all through. (U)
The President: Yes. They said it might have been more like a booby trap than a traditional mine. It's difficult to tell whether they're deactivated. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: And it was in a school, I think. Well, they're pretty sick, actually. As more comes out about these Serb soldiers, it really is unbelievable. (U)

The President: There was a show on CNN on how mad the Russians are at America and me. Our guys told me this TV station I interviewed with yesterday seems to be the only one that came close to showing the truth about what Milosevic was up to. They're going to have to come to grips with it. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I think in the near term we have to check the schedule by which our people are moving in. There was also a special about the French troops trying to separate the Serbs and the Kosovars. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Well, I won't keep you. I feel like we had a good G-8. I just wanted you to know I'm sorry about your men. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: That's kind of you, Bill. I thought we had a good G-8, too. So you're off to Macedonia tomorrow? (U)

The President: Yeah, I'm going to a state dinner in Macedonia [n.b., the President meant Slovenia] tonight, and Djukanovic, the Montenegrin President, is here. I'll give you a readout in a couple of days. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. Goodbye. (U)

The President: Goodbye, Tony. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Bob Ford, Joel Ehrendreich, Rob Williams, Jenny McGee, Roger Merletti and James Smith

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: June 30, 1999, 3:14 - 3:22 p.m. EDT
Chicago, Illinois

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: How are you doing? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Pretty grim.
The President: What exactly do the unionists want Sinn Fein to do now? (E)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes. (E)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That way the IRA doesn’t look like it’s surrendering to the unionists? (E)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes. (E)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: It looks like you could manage this marching thing if you could solve the bigger problem.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Which means if they meet all the local people's conditions, they could march.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Are you going back to the meeting now?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: Do you want me to call them in a couple of hours -- Adams and Trimble?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Right now?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Why don't I monitor it from here?
Prime Minister Blair: Let

The President: I will check in where I am in 20 minutes to see if they're through. Let

Prime Minister Blair: Let

The President: If they're in a meeting, I will wait until they finish to call them. Let

Prime Minister Blair: Let

The President: They, the unionists? Let

Prime Minister Blair: Let

The President: Yes. Let

Prime Minister Blair: Let

The President: Okay, I'm on it. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks, Bill. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Sean Tarver and Frank Jarosinski

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: June 30, 1999, 9:25 - 9:38 p.m. CDT
Chicago, Illinois

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: You are where you were last time we talked, aren’t you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I know. It’s just terrible. Will Trimble even take my call now? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Make a counterproposal? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yeah. E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Is that their counterproposal one?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What is Gerry Adams saying in response?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: You mean put that through Parliament?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What did he say?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Do you think keeping them up all night will get them weary and make them give in?
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: You mean let them get a little sleep. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President:

Is there anything I can say to Gerry Adams? Anything the United States can offer them to help them politically to move closer to where Trimble is? You know I actually have far more popularity within the Catholic community than the Protestant community. Most of the Protestants think I am a turncoat. (CEF)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: You offered him an act of Parliament, right? (CEF)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.
The President: So, they are not a judge of it?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: God, I think that is the best deal.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Do you think Trimble will take that?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: But Gerry thinks that is like crying uncle.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Especially if Great Britain can be the guarantor of both sides. If you have legal authority, they won't understand that.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes. So I should tell Adams that Trimble will help him work through that?
Prime Minister Blair: Yes. I have a little fiddling around to do, but probably in the next quarter hour.

The President: Do you believe I should call in the next half hour or let them sleep first?

Prime Minister Blair: I would call them now.

The President: Okay, I will start to call them. My national security people are in if you need to call me in the middle of the night. I know what to say now.

Prime Minister Blair: I will try to call them now.

The President: You think I might be able to get them in the next ten minutes?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: Okay, I am getting ready to get on the plane, so let me see what I can do. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Alright, Bill. (U)

The President: Okay, goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Joel Schrader, Miles Murphy, Matt Sibley, Amy Swarm and Roger Merletti

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: July 1, 1999, 7:26 - 7:58 a.m. EDT
The Residence

The President: Hello Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Sorry, it must be early morning for you. (U)

The President: It's fine. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

---

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

---

CONFIDENTIAL
Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(d)
Declassify On: 7/8/00

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
The President: I talked to Adams about that for a long time. I spent the better part of a year trying to convince him that ought to be his position without success. And last night I do believe, rightly or wrongly, his belief is that he made some significant commitments yesterday about what he is prepared to do.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. (G)
The President: Did they commit to follow Chastelain's timetable? Let

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:
Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: There is no question -- I think Adams believes that.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: What about the argument they can all take the government down later, and we will all support it.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes. (Ο)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: My view is that is what you ought to work on. Is there anything you can do, any stick or carrot, to shore Trimble up? (Ο)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I do believe they are trying to help on that; I think Gerry was open to it. (Ο)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Well let me ask you this. Is that an argument for you to go back to a hard deadline? (Ο)
The President: It's crazy. The whole thing is just nuts, but I think your best chance is to get, based on what you say, I do think they will accelerate the timetable.

Prime Minister Blair: I have talked until I am blue in the face.

Prime Minister Blair: For one thing, there has to be some definitiveness to the commitment. I didn’t know they weren’t more definite.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: But the one thing that I am now persuaded on is, after one year of trying to make a case,
Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I think that is what we need to work on, and E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Okay. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Robin Rickard, Joel Schrader, Don Cheremie and James Smith

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: July 1, 1999, 7:25 - 7:34 p.m. EDT
Jack Kent Cooke Stadium

The President: Hey, Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. Hello. Well. I think we're finally getting somewhere.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Yes. They say they can't do it before the end of October?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, they can't do it earlier.

The President: It would be interesting to see if they would do it earlier if they can get in earlier.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, I can see that, actually.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I'm happy to. Do you want me to call tonight? Do they know about the proposal?
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I'll call Trimble tonight. Gerry tonight?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Because Bertie's gone back to Dublin, right?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, he has. Jim can check.

The President: I will have Jim check to see if the Irish have talked to Gerry. If they have, I will call him. In any event, I'll talk to David. When I call him, what should I say? That I hope he takes this deal?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, that's right.

The President: Yes. And you will make this agreement public tomorrow? This proposal?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: At what point tomorrow will you publicly float this? So I could make a public comment.

Prime Minister Blair: Our people will coordinate with your folks. Hang on just a second.

The President: Yes, I shouldn't talk to Gerry before the Irish. That would be usurping.
Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Got it.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Get some sleep.

Prime Minister Blair: You, too. I'm sorry. It was very helpful when you talked to them yesterday.

The President: Okay. Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Miles Murphy, Robin Rickard,
Don Cheremie, Doug Bayley and James Smith

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: July 2, 1999, 6:39 - 6:48 p.m. EDT
Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Well, congratulations. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes, but old Trimble was in a good frame of mind. I was stunned. He was pretty proud of himself when I talked to him. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Did you talk to him? (E)

The President: Yeah, I talked to him an hour ago, 30 minutes ago. He was really upbeat, saying it's bad and it'll get worse, but it'll get better. He went through a laundry list of who was with him, who was against him, who was on the fence. I told him I would call them if he wanted. I told him what we always agreed I'd tell him. I was very encouraged to see how upbeat he was. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: When I left a couple of hours ago, I was a bit down. E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

DECLASSIFIED UNDER AUTHORITY OF THE INTRAGENCY SECURITY CLASSIFICATION APPEALS PANEL, E.O. 13526, SECTION 5.3(3)
ISCAP APPEAL NO. 2013-096, DOCUMENT NO. 70
DECLASSIFICATION DATE: October 14, 2015

CONFIDENTIAL
Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1/5(d)
Declassify On: 7/8/09

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
The President: I think it is and I think he may be there now.

Prime Minister Blair: Do you mean that?

The President: Absolutely. I told him, give me a list; I will call every damn one of them.

Prime Minister Blair: I had no idea.

The President: He said Taylor was with him, but I'm glad to do it.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Adams was in a good humor, too.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I'll keep doing it. Trimble said it will be a real hard sell, but I think I could do it. He was really in a very good place. That is all I know.

[The line dropped and was reestablished.]

The President: Sorry. We got cut off. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: My fault. I'm on my way back from the airport. (U)

The President: Are you in London? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I just landed. (U)
The President: Well, I don't know what else to say, but I think this is great. You did great. We've just got to nurse them now, to get them there. Gerry was happy as a clam. He said he had to make Trimble look good, one thing that encouraged me.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

I told him if he wanted me to call anybody, I would call. (2)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I made a statement. I said you had issued this proposal as a way forward and I thought it was a very good thing, it gave them a chance to shape their own destiny and their own government and to get rid of guns and violence for everybody. The United States expects everybody to comply and we support you strongly and expect everyone who benefits to fully comply. (3)

Prime Minister Blair: And you said that on screen, did you?

Let

The President: Right. Let

Prime Minister Blair: That will be good. Let

The President: We already got some feedback from Ireland. It was already beamed over there on CNN or something. (2)
The President: Yes, even the ones who are mad at me for being too pro-Sinn Fein, my dumping all over them will give them a little confidence. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yeas, I will see about that. You have your people call me back with a list. Talk to Trimble; whoever he wants me to call, I will call. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Many, many thanks. (U)

The President: Get yourself some sleep, you've earned it. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks, I will. Goodbye. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Ralph Sigler, Liz Rogers,
Michael Manning, Rob Williams, Joel
Ehrendreich and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: July 12, 1999, 10:01 - 10:14 a.m. EDT
Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill, how are you? (U)

The President: Hi, Tony, I'm fine. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I keep seeing these great pictures over here of you in the press from your trip. You are doing some great sweeping tours. (U)

The President: I've been going through the poorest parts of America. People have got to realize that not everyone here is rich. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It is really effective campaigning if I can say so. (U)

The President: I don't know exactly what kind of financing you do to encourage British investment. I've gotten quite a bit of steam behind the idea of offering the same incentives to invest in poor -- really poor -- neighborhoods that I've given them to invest in developing economies overseas. So it turns around the argument that people gripe about giving incentives for overseas but not giving them the same incentives to invest in our own

CONFIDENTIAL
Classified by: Glyn T. Davies
Reason: 1.5(d)
Declassify On: 7/13/09

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
rural and poor areas and Indian reservations. It’s getting a pretty good reaction. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Interesting. Now, on the Irish issue -- here’s where we are.

The President: Yes, I agree. Let

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: What does the Good Friday Accord say on the timing of prisoner releases?

Prime Minister Blair: It says that it's in the hands of the body that deals with prisoner releases and should run up to May 2000. But it also says that decommissioning should run to May 2000 as well.

The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I got nowhere with Hume on SDLP after I talked with you. So I don't know if I can nose around there again.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Adams is still holding out the position that nobody else should be in the executive even if it is all their fault.
The President: Yes, I agree with that but I don't know what that does for you on the other side.

Prime Minister Blair: I don't know either for the minute.

The President: Yes, well I'll look at what is...I think the IRA might give some kind of commitment that there would be a statement after July 15.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Yes, alright, let me see what I can do.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill, I'll be around anytime. I think the next two days are pretty crucial, really.

The President: Well, I'll see what I can do.

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks, Bill, I'll speak to you soon then. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Liz Rogers, Michael Manning, Rob Williams, Joel Ehrendreich and Lawrence Butler

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: July 12, 1999, 1:56 - 2:01 p.m. EDT

Oval Office

The President: Hello? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill, sorry to trouble you again.

The President: Yes, McGuinness is here. [21]
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Won't the IRA say this is just changing the sequencing again. Basically they have a matter of mistrust. They still think they're going to get jacked around on the executive on this, don't they?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me ask you this. What about the legislation itself? I hear the SDLP has problems with it.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: But do you think the legislation problems would go away if you had any statement from the IRA?

Prime Minister Blair: I think so.

The President: Could you change the legislation to overcome directives if you get the IRA statement?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me call you back. When are you going to bed? It must be getting pretty late there now. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It's only 7 o'clock now. (U)
The President: Let me see what I can do. I'll call you back. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, thanks, Bill. (U)

The President: Okay, goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Doug Bayley, Don Cheramie, Robin Rickard, Bob Ford, James Smith and Richard Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: July 16, 1999, 10:09-10:33 a.m. EDT
Camp David, Maryland

The President: Hello? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Well, today is not as bad as yesterday, is it? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I think that is the right analysis. (C)

The President: I just had Barak here, and he said how much you had done to help. He admires you so much. We had a great talk. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d) (C) I am seeing Massimo D'Alema on Monday. (C)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d) (C)

CONFIDENTIAL
Classified by: Tracey A. Jacobson
Reason: 1.5(d)
Declassify On: 7/8/09
Prime Minister Blair: He's quite optimistic on the peace stuff, is he? (L)

The President: It won't be easy, I can tell you.

Prime Minister Blair: That is a bit of hope, then. (L)

The President: The other nice trivial thing is that the British Open is humilitating every golfer in the world. The average score yesterday was 79. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It's the bloody weather, is it? (U)

The President: Yes. They have made it has hard as they could. They enjoy making people miserable. It's quite good, though. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We must get you up there playing someday. (U)

The President: Where are we? I hope I gave a helpful statement yesterday. I said that I had failed to persuade them to work it out, too, and we should just go on from here. (L)

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: There's nothing to do now, is there? Is George Mitchell going to do something to help a bit? Let Prime Minister Blair: That would be helpful, Bill.

The President: Yes. Let
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: They can't have it both ways. So many of them, I believe, there are so very many of them who are having a hard time; whatever they say, in letting go of it. It's like their security blanket. Imagine what their lives are like, a certain amount of romance, danger, drama -- (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: -- power. You're asking them to put a little white bread sandwich in a lunchbox and go off to work at the factory. It'll be hard for them. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: You mentioned this once before, I don't know if you recall. I have put some people to work on that. I

The President: Sinn Fein proper can imagine themselves running social services agencies or political services, but somebody ought to talk to Gerry about what are their people going to do with their lives when this is over. I think it's a big problem. It plays on their psychology. I just -- I've been thinking a lot of what I'm going to do when I leave here, but -- this may be a big postulate -- but what if I had been a romantic terrorist, especially lately, when it wasn't a lot of work and you didn't have to set off more than one bomb every two years, you know? I think you really have to think about what we can do not only to guarantee their security and safety, but to give some meaning to their lives, some way that they can participate in the new Ireland. I may be wrong, but I think it's a huge problem for Gerry Adams, even if most are not aware of what the real problem is. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I agree. I have some people working on that.
The President: They should be asked whether they have ever actually talked to these people about what they would do with their lives when this is over. They may have some ideas, but I can’t help but believe that is a big problem here. If Gerry thinks it’s silly, at least you’ve opened it with him and he should consider doing something.

Prime Minister Blair: We will do that.

The President: I’ll call some of our Irish guys over the weekend, too.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Do you think I should come over there? Is that what you were going to say?

Prime Minister Blair: I was going to say it is not a bad idea.

The President: Okay, I'll do it. I can do an overnight or a day trip.

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, one other thing.

The President: I'll call George and some of our congressmen over the weekend. I'll get on that. Maybe I can do that, if George can come up with something different. It wouldn't be very different, but it could look different.

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, one other thing.

The President: Yes, we have to have something there. Did you see George Soros' article?

Prime Minister Blair: No, I didn't.

The President: It's what you're arguing, but on a faster timetable. He is arguing for a customs union within the Balkans and some provision where you put them on a clear path to EU membership as a region. Even if Serbia gets rid of Milosevic, you can't deal with them on a nation-by-nation basis, because of the inter-ethnic problems. He basically said they need to come up with a regional currency to force them together. It's quite a clever piece. Soros is not always right, but he's a genuine visionary. I will get someone to fax it over to you. And I'll see what we can say on the 30th.

Prime Minister Blair: Maybe our people should talk. I think we have to have an impact beyond just holding a conference.

The President: I agree with that. We sure as hell can't go over there and just have a conference. Alright, man. Keep your chin up.

Prime Minister Blair: All the best. (U)

The President: Okay. Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Bilateral Meeting Between The President and Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: United States
- The President
  - Samuel R. Berger, Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs
  - James Steinberg, Deputy Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs
  - Steven Ricchetti, Deputy Chief of Staff
  - Gene Sperling, Assistant to the President for Economic Policy and Director of the National Economic Council
  - Antony Blinken, Special Assistant to the President and Senior Director for European Affairs, NSC Staff (notetaker)

Great Britain
- Tony Blair, Prime Minister
- John Sawers, Diplomatic Advisor
- Allistar Campbell, Press Secretary
- Private Secretary

DATE, TIME: June 18, 1999, 1:40 - 2:35 p.m.
PLACE: Hyatt Hotel, Cologne, Germany

The President: Tony, you did a very good job on the debt issue. If we can make it work, that will mean almost 2/3 debt forgiveness for the poorest countries. This would be a real step forward. The Jubilee has enormous appeal -- getting rid of all the debt for the millennium. But it also has real problems that we would need to access before we embrace the concept. For example, Bob Rubin points out that for countries that may want to borrow more who get 100 percent forgiveness, wiping out their debt will be much harder for them because it will effect their credit rating. Maybe we should look at adding rescheduling... without taking them out of the credit market. Rubin feels very strongly about this. But anyway, what we need to do is focus on the fact that we are doing a huge deal here. This is a major achievement. We must not let what we are not doing become the story. It's what we are doing that's important. (E)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I fully agree with that.

Jim Steinberg: The problem is specifying who. That is, who are the 1,000 companies and why are we choosing them. I think it would be better to call on the private sector as a whole. (E)

The President: That's true but on the other hand this needs to be organized. We can't just call on companies to act. (E)

Jim Steinberg: Well there is a legal question when asking specific companies. (E)

Prime Minister Blair:

Gene Sperling: The problem of asking specific companies is that there could be a feeling of coercion. (E)

The President: I think the thing to do would be to designate a lead person in the business community to do this. That's what we did on welfare. I asked Eli Segal to run a voluntary program. (E)

Prime Minister Blair:

Gene Sperling: It would be a real political challenge to support. And also I think there would be concern that we have opened the door at the last moment. (E)

The President: The problem frankly is Congress. It is a different party and not likely to do me any favors and so I do not think we would get support. The way it works is that there is an allocation to each committee. It is always less for foreign affairs. So we are forced to choose among programs.
There is a real weakness of commitment to foreign aid, especially since the end of the Cold War. We have a big surplus. If I take the caps off, the Republicans will push for a tax cut. We have made a commitment to save Social Security. So it would be hard to do this without opening a Pandora’s Box. We need to wait to see if we get an omnibus deal. So I am reluctant to look like we are urging this and then be in a position where we can’t deliver. But if we can quietly see that there is a consensus on this, I can say to Congress this is what the whole world wants to do. It is a good idea on the merits. But it would be better to forge a consensus here than for us to lead on this issue given the politics. Also, we will have another shot over the next couple of years. (c)

Tony, do you want to talk about Kosovo? I have one big point to make: you had a huge impact on the execution of this campaign and on our ability to sell what we needed to do. You realized the need to improve our communications. Now, the big decision we have to face is making sure that this works. There is a huge effort in bringing people back, in rebuilding lives, in spite of the magnitude of the crisis. There is a mental health crisis. I sent Elie Wiesel to the region to talk to the refugees. I talked to Jesse Jackson about this. All of us agree that we need some kind of systematic, organized effort maybe working through faith groups. We need to start. But before even all of that, the UN must pick someone we would hire to oversee the civilian implementation. Nationality doesn’t matter to me. All that counts is confidence, energy, and organization skills. Those are the keys. The Economist had a puff piece on Bildt.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I fully agree. This is a critical decision. Who are the candidates? (c)

Samuel Berger: No one has emerged that I am aware of. The selection seems to focus on former Foreign Ministers or defeated Prime Ministers. With all respect, that is the wrong mind-set. We need a CEO-type. (c)

The President: There must be a terrific European business person who has worked in the Balkans, for example. Someone with imagination and executive ability. (c)
The President: Yes he is, but of course, the Europeans want a European. (2)

Prime Minister Blair: Well I am happy with an American.

The President: I am afraid that the UN will dither on this for weeks. (2)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes,

Samuel Berger: If I could just raise one idea. You both should lay down a marker with the Secretary General on how you see the job. You should imply a veto right. In other words, you together would expect he would not appoint someone without your approval. (2)

The President: Anyway, I don't know your politics in Europe. But I do know that this is our deal. If it fails, it will be our failure. My have no preconceived notions and no conditions on nationality. My only concern is confidence. (2)

Jacques Klein is tough and good. But I keep coming back to the bottom line -- whoever it is has to be up to the job. (2)

John Sawers: (2)

Allister Campbell:
The President: I don't think the Secretary General is thinking about this in the right way. He should be calling us to ask who is the smartest businessperson in the United States and Europe. Who can get business people to support this.

My position is don't look for someone who has navigated the shoals of partisan politics and never built anything. This requires special additional skills. I would have loved to have the job myself. (ə)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, it really is rebuilding a country from scratch. (U)

The President: If I were the head of a company, I'd love this job. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We should start digging for names so at least there is a good choice.

The President: This must not be about politics. (ə)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:

Prime Minister Blair: In the end, this really is a unique position. It's like being the prosecutor of a country. You need communication skills, executive skills.

John Sawers:

The President: On the issue of relief we've got $1 billion earmarked for the short-term. On long-term reconstruction, I guess we have this conference in the Fall. On the EU's Stability Pact, we want to contribute but since most of the money is European, it's hard for us to shape it. I think we need to take a step back and look at the Marshall Plan, and also think about what we want this to look like in ten years. We need a prosperous Balkans so there is less temptation for conflict. We want it to be more integrated with Europe. With the EU, with NATO. The first thing we need to do is to define the universe: Slovenia, Romania, Bulgaria, Macedonia, Albania, Montenegro, Kosovo. And Serbia if we can get rid of Milosevic. I think we need to apply one of the central ideas of the Marshall Plan which is to get the beneficiaries to meet together and define their own vision of the Balkans, how they would use the money, how they would apportion it. We need to force them to assume responsibility for their own future. They need to have a real plan and develop themselves with our help. There are some real smart guys there that can do this.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes,

The President: That's true. We all need to think about what more we can do. We, in the United States, need to think about whether we should say to Congress that we should accelerate accession for some of the Balkan countries into NATO. You might consider the same thing for the European Union. Should there be a Customs Union with the EU, like Turkey. Should you accelerate the session process? If you think we should push the envelope, we can push Schroeder, Chirac and D'Alema to think about this.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree we should push the envelope.

The President: We need direct aid too. We've already got some going for Albania and Macedonia. I think we need to structure our assistance in Kosovo in a way that is helpful to the Front Line States. For example, using their construction companies. We need to get people on the ground to start turning our roadmap for the Balkans into reality. We need the person, we need the plan, we need an approach that takes into account the whole region. What I think we should do on the Stability Pact is for us and Prodi to convene a meeting in the Balkans maybe in Sophia. Bring all the people together, the U.S., the EU, the concerned countries, and the international financial institutions. We need to forge a common vision and get their buy in. We need to start a process for them to meet and to plan their own future. It's not like these people are not smart.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I agree that would be a very good way to proceed.

The President: Similarly, we need to decide whatever we can do with NATO, the EU, and with aid. We need to get to work. If we can get the people in the region bought in, it will change the dynamics and psychology of people and the region.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair: I agree very strongly.

Samuel Berger: We also have to solve this problem with the Russians. I think we are almost there. (U)

John Sawers:

Samuel Berger: Actually, that's been sorted out. The real problem that still needs to be resolved is that Yeltsin continues to want a sector.

Prime Minister Blair: Let me make clear my view:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I think we all need to watch them. If we have something that we can live with, I don't mind letting them declare victory so we can just get this out of the headlines and move on. Right now they are in the way and we need to resolve this. I want to nail this Russian thing down. The other reason is that I am truly worried that Yeltsin might make a dangerous decision. He thinks we are trying to extend our sphere of influence. He just doesn't understand we are trying to make a more peaceful Europe and reverse ethnic cleansing. But I think he will do the right thing at the end.

Prime Minister Blair: We need to close on this today. (U)
The President: Yeltsin is the only Russian leader who truly hates communism, believes in freedom and integration with the west. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I agree with that. In addition, we need a huge effort to move the center of Russian politics. I think one way to do that is for us to get more parliamentarians there. It's a huge effort to go to them and to bring them to us in a more systematic way but I think it's worth it. That will really help to educate politicians there and move them to the center. We need to combat their insularity. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I know we have run out of time but at some point I would like to have a few words about Northern Ireland. (C)

The President: Yes, I've got some ideas that we should discuss. Let's try to find some time this afternoon. (C)

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Michael Manning, Deana Sutliff, Roger Merletti, James Smith and Richard Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: September 8, 1999, 5:13 – 5:32 p.m. EDT
Oval Office

The President: Hello. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Tony, how are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine, I'm great. I've had a very good holiday and I'm feeling good. (U)

The President: Did you go to Italy? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I went to Italy and France and had a good time. Where were you now? (U)

The President: I was in Martha's Vineyard and then New York, but I’m about to go off to New Zealand for a week, and I wanted to talk to you before I left. I've been talking to everybody about this East Timor situation and the rumor mill is rife that Habibie might be deposed or they're sending some military leader out there who says he will never give East Timor up. I believe we all need to put as much pressure as possible on Indonesia to accept a force and then figure out who'll make it up. The Aussies are ready to go, they want to send 2,000 or 3,000 people.
there; they don’t think it will take very many people. And, if the UN approved it, the Chinese might even send some people. But I think it would be a very embarrassing comparison to Kosovo if Indonesia runs all the Timorese out of the country or if they reverse it and we don’t do anything. We’ve got to do something, it seems to me, so anything you can do to put the heat on Indonesia would be helpful. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I agree.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Guterres is going to table a motion even if Indonesia won’t support it. He’s got to. He said there was a 10-km human chain demonstrating against him. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Absolutely right. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Me neither, but we’ll keep working on it. That was my whole worry that there would be nobody you can work with. It’s a tough deal. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Yes. I think -- I don’t think the Chinese will allow the resolution to go through if they don’t accept it, because of this whole sovereignty thing.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: No.

Prime Minister Blair: I haven’t, either.

The President: The reason I haven’t -- there’s a rumor he’s being deposed now -- the reason I haven’t called is, every time I put pressure on him, he gets unmerciful grief there that he’s toadying to the United States.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I wanted to say a word about the Balkans. I got your letter and I understand the pressure you’re under to cut deployment in order to increase readiness and retention, but I hope you can maintain your position as a lead nation in both Bosnia and Kosovo, because our partnership there has been a bedrock of success and the Russians, I believe, are working out better than we’d hoped. I think the Kosovo thing is settling down, if we can just hang on. Your letter indicated you’re talking to allies about making contributions to backfill your forces. I don’t know how that’s going, but I hope we can maintain a good level of cooperation and ability with whoever goes in there.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Me, too. I think we shouldn't get too soft on these sanctions against Serbia. I think we ought to tighten the sanctions on Milosevic and his crowd. I hope you'll get the other guys in line. (C)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair: (C)

The President: Have you talked to Schroeder since his election setback? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: No.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm due to see him in the next couple of weeks. (C)

The President: I'll try to call him before I leave for Asia. There's not much I can do, but I can encourage him. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: I agree. How are we doing on Northern Ireland? How's George doing? (♂)

Prime Minister Blair: George is doing fine.

The President: The Catholic? (♂)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: It was unanimous, wasn't it? Including the two Americans? (♂)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Don't you think it will just get worse if we don't resolve the politics of it? (♂)
Prime Minister Blair: I think there's some chance, but it's pretty slim at the moment.

The President: I'm ready any time. You just have to tell me when.
The President: So, the main thing you want me to do now is say something nice about the Patten report?

Prime Minister Blair: For us, now, that is the critical thing.

The President: I’ll be down in New Zealand, but there’s a hell of a lot going on in the world at the moment, and we can always talk. I just wanted you to know I’ll be out of pocket for the next week or 10 days.

Prime Minister Blair: When am I going to see you? Are you doing the Third Way thing in Florence? (U)

The President: Absolutely. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: They’re all very excited. (U)

The President: You shouldn’t be the only guy speaking English who gets to go to Italy. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: When I was in Italy I learned a little Italian. (U)

The President: You did? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Enough to get by.

The President: Is he one of ours?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, he’s one of ours.

The President: Gosh, I thought I had had him in here. Let me check it out.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Got it. When are his elections?
Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. Have a good time in New Zealand. (U)

The President: Okay. Goodbye. (U)

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Jenny McGee, Robert Ford, Joel Ehrendreich, Elizabeth Rogers, Roger Merletti and Richard Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: October 13, 1999, 10:38 - 11:29 a.m. Oval Office

The President: Tony, how are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm fine. (U)

The President: I haven't talked to you in a while and I wanted to check in on a few things. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: How are you doing? (U)

The President: I'm great. I've been fighting reactionaries in Congress, we're winning with the people. I thought your speech to your party group was great. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Thanks. We've got an interesting situation here at the moment because the conservatives have really moved off to a very far right position. (U)

The President: That's what our guys are doing here. One reason Bush is doing so well is because he criticized one thing on the right. He is making people think he is saving them from the right. But, it's a fraud because he is really for them on everything else. I have to figure out how to expose the fraud that Bush is the new Clinton, establishing a new Republican party like I made a new Democratic party. It's helping Bush but it is killing Al. They asked me what I thought, and I said it was terrible how the right wing was treating him. After all, he was for them, and his lobbyists organized them to kill our patients’ bill of rights. He was for school vouchers and for the NRA trying to kill our handgun measures. Why were they being so mean to him? I thought it was terrible how mean they were being, but they wouldn’t give what I said that much press -- it wasn’t what they wanted to say. That is what we’ve got to do. Al has to position himself between Bush and Bradley. Now it’s very interesting. We are at a point where the perceptions of major players are at variance with their positions. It’s a terrible thing and there’s a limit to how much I can do because, in our political culture, I can say what I think but it will hurt if it appears I’m trying to control the outcome of another election. I’ve got to be careful not to tell people how to vote. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. Policy is the way to do it, isn’t it? (U)

The President: Yes, you’re right, it is. What I am doing -- the results speak for themselves. The question is not whether we are going to change, but how we change -- a U-turn or hold on to what we’re doing. Here are the new ideas for the 21st century. That is the argument I am making, and the argument Gore has to make. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I think he’s got to really. If it comes down to general positioning, it will get more difficult. (U)

The President: The people still don’t know what a VP does in our country. It’s not an accident we’ve elected only two in our history. But it’s still the best way to become president -- someone dies or something happens in the interim. The Vice President has become more important in modern American history. That’s how Nixon got to come back as President. Nixon barely lost, and Bush won when Dukakis collapsed. It’s not such a bad thing to be a Vice President now. It’s not the handicap it once was, but you have to capitalize on it. So far we haven’t been able to capitalize on it even though our ratings are slightly higher than Eisenhower’s and Reagan’s were at this point. He ought to be able to do that, I think he is getting it sorted out now. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It’s really about definition, I think. (U)
The President: It always is, isn't it? I have half a dozen things I'd like to discuss. How did your government change play out? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: __________________________

The President: I really like him. He is such a bright man. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: __________________________

The President: I saw him recently. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: He told me that.

The President: It was probably time for Mo to get out. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: __________________________

The President: She served you well and worked very hard. She made people laugh when she pissed them off, and that's a great thing. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: __________________________

The President: If you want me to do anything, let me know. I know that Ian Paisley got mad at what I said last week, but (E)

Prime Minister Blair: __________________________

I'll try not to offer anymore unhelpful analogies. I wrote to him that I will try to stay out of the analysis business. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: __________________________
The President: I've always found that if someone's offended by a remark, it is better to apologize immediately because people who agree with what you said won't hold it against you. Anyway, ring the bell if you want me to do anything. They just have to finally decide whether to cut a deal or not. I think in the end they have to decide. It has dragged on so long I don't expect either side to eat the whole thing. [DET]

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: One thing Gerry said, I've never talked to you about it, Gerry told me they trusted de Chastelain and would stay on it if he promulgated a schedule. [DET]

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: You could even have de Chastelain promulgate a schedule for decommissioning starting on a date that was ten days after they got in the executive. [DET]

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes. [DET]

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What if de Chastelain promulgated a schedule for decommissioning and then you said to Trimble that he'd better let Sinn Fein in the government before then so he doesn't give them an excuse for slipping that date.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: And then Trimble lets them in and says if they slip, we'll walk out. What about that?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What about Adams?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Anyway, that is best idea I've got.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: It sort of takes it away from them. If you could let de Chastelain offer the schedule, they could say something nice about how they respect de Chastelain. But they've got to be in the government to fulfill this obligation, then if this date slips then Trimble says I'm walking. And then it is all on them. They both have what they asked for, they are in the executive and then have this date staring them in the face -- only ten days away. It seems that would help Trimble with his constituents if he has a deal in advance and not three months away. Everybody's used to wandering around their offices and getting to know each other and trying not to look like the biggest asshole at the garden party. This has to happen fairly quickly.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Why don’t we call Mitchell and run it by him if you think it might have some merit.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That way Adams doesn’t have to say anything to get into the government but they are screwed immediately and quickly if they don’t deliver. Let me run it by Mitchell.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Okay. There a couple of other things I’d like to run through. First, thank you and Jacques and Gerhard for running that piece on CTBT in the New York Times. Here’s the problem. My Senate agreed to a truncated schedule. Half of the Republicans are against this on its merit. For the others it’s just politics. They are out to screw me because they don’t want to help me and don’t want to help Al. But a bunch are genuine isolationists. They just say “piss on our allies” and “to hell with what they think; screw anybody who screws with us.” It’s just sick what a world we are living in here. But I’m trying to work a deal so this is not voted down. I’m trying to work on a schedule. If they start hearings, we will get them involved in the process. Even if they don’t ratify while I am president, it’ll be obvious to the world that they are strengthening the treaty. They will if they are working on safeguards. But it is just silly intellectually, just awful what they are doing. And they are hurting themselves. They are giving us a good issue in the elections. It is terrible what they have done. But your piece was very helpful and I wanted to thank you for it. The problem is that under the rules of the Senate they are in a position where a small majority can prevent the vote from being delayed now. We may get it put off by one vote.

Prime Minister Blair: Right.

The President: Whatever happens, we’ll bang them pretty good.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Thank you. I don’t think this is the end of American leadership on arms control, just parliamentary mancevers. It’s just a rightwing group and they are just way out there.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: It’s stupid. They won’t pay UN dues and they don’t want an aid budget. They want a big military that never does anything. They spend more money on defense than I do, but don’t want them to do anything, and I’m the most pro-defense Democrat President that we’ve had. They want a bunch of bombs and missiles and a defense system, and then they just cut everybody’s taxes. They want to put rich people behind gates so the starving can’t get at them. They basically want an upscale Brazil for America. It is awful, but I think we can beat them back. I want to say a word about Florence, and then I’ve got two other things. I’m glad we let Cardoso come, but can you explain to me, in a European context, why we didn’t invite Wim Kok or Guterres from Portugal?

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: The other guy I thought should have been invited, who has been a wonderful ally to all of us is Chretien.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: I’m afraid it will undercut the whole idea of a global movement. I will not be in office to work with these people more than another 15 months, but you and Chretien may be around another five years. The other guy in Latin America is Zedillo,

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d) But if I were doing it and I were European, I would want Guterres and Kok and I don’t know about Austria, I don’t know him. Chretien, every time we need him, he shows up and raises the flag.

SECRET

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely. I am in complete agreement.

The President: Are you going to sing the Marseillaise?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: I do too. And it is also a way for Europe to get more influence over him in a positive way.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Is there anything we can do to help him?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Maybe one thing that could come out of Italy is some sort of statement that will help him.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: The thing that bothers me is that he has the worst of both worlds.
bloodshed in '94 we had policies in place that turned the country around by '96, congressional gains in '96 and '98, and we may be able to get Congress back in 2000. (C)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yeah. I'll take some guidance from you, and I will talk to him about it. I think he's trying to do the right thing but he's been a little foggy about it. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree. I will do what I can. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes. Okay, we need to think about that. Let me mention a couple of other things. The WTO ministerial will be held in Seattle in Washington State in December and preparations are in full swing. I think this is a major opportunity for the third way agenda to put a human face on the global economy. We have to come out for more open trade and the legitimate interests of labor and environment. I've been to Geneva twice to talk about this and the child labor convention. We think it would be a very good thing to have a WTO working group on trade and strategy analysis, not on negotiations. We have been in touch with your people, and I hope we can work together on this. A lot of people are afraid to discuss the two things in the same breath. But the whole pitch here has to be we can't turn our backs on integrating the global economy. But I want to do it in a way that takes everybody along. (C)
The President: Yes, it is. We're going to have every NGO and labor union demonstrating against us and we have to have something that answers what they are saying. I see rising protectionism in this country. In the last two years, we took on a huge amount of the shortfall of the Asian economy by increasing imports and running a trade deficit which is unusual in conventional terms, but the world has changed quite a lot. For example, in '97 and '98 we bought ten times more steel from Japan, China, and Russia than Europe did. Protectionism is rising among Republicans and Democrats, and I see it manifesting itself in other countries. We have to find a way to turn back the tide of it. We have to try to find mechanisms where we can discuss all these things together. Europe is in better shape on this than we are. I'm not trying to impose standards on other countries, but there's got to be a way to work our way through this.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I wish you would. We have to see how this plays out against the media story in America to see if there is more coverage given to the people demonstrating than to the fact that we are going to meet. Two others issues I would like raise. President Frei of Chile raised Pinochet with me in New Zealand. He said Pinochet's presence in London is a big problem for the Chilean government. He thought they had worked out a solution to get rid of him by putting him in the Senate. They are very concerned now. Our position has got to be that this is a legal matter and whatever you do, we will be in agreement. But Chile has twice the per capita income of any other in Latin America, they have had this immense success, and they thought they had put this nightmare behind them.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: The real thing we need to do is get more victims to say "send him home and let us handle it here." I got it.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: I won't say this to anybody. I'm also aware what a problem this is for you. My take on where they are is they thought they had done their version of Mandela's Truth Commission -- put it in a box and store it there, not live forever.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: A final point -- Iraq. I am afraid we're in a different place in the Security Council. We worked all these years on negotiations and before that, and I hope we don't get divided here. The language your people worked out with the French crosses a red line because it suspends sanctions on Saddam Hussein before disarmament. When I took office, the Bush position was, I thought, unfair. We wouldn't ever lift sanctions until Saddam Hussein complied with his disarmament obligations and with obligations on all other UN resolutions, human rights and all that. Now I am prepared to say that if he meets his disarmament obligations and puts a system in place where he's complying, I would be prepared to suspend sanctions and liberalize the oil-for-food program -- especially with the price of oil going up, we should be better off. But I think if we say to this guy, "If you start to comply, we will lift sanctions," he will quickly reestablish the weapons of mass destruction program, and it will become known in two years that he has. It may not happen while I'm in office, but it will for you. It could become a real nightmare for you.

I understand where the French are and we are prepared to move from our former position especially on oil-for-food things. I know everyone is getting sanctions fatigue,

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Would it end the suspension because any country could vote to veto continuing it?

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Our guys here in Congress, even the Democrats, are attacking me because I haven’t done enough to get rid of him. I think they will eat me alive if I agree to lift sanctions while he has his weapons program going on.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: But it looks like the UN has finally given in to him if you have no sanctions without disarmament.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Have you worked out the differences between “certain” and “all”? ( )

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I don’t know, I am very skeptical. I will look at the specifics. ( )
Prime Minister Blair: Look Bill.

The President:

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: There may be a solution here in the details, but I am genuinely quite skeptical. I've been dealing with this guy for a long time.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We've been criticized for not being more condemning of the coup.
Two strong people can do the sensible thing. I think our objective ought to be to get them to do the sensible thing.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Okay. We will stay in touch. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, when will we see you then? (U)

The President: I will see you in Italy and probably at the OSCE thing in Turkey. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah. It will be good to have a proper talk with you. (U)

The President: Yeah. You are in a position, as you get more influence in Europe, I believe we’ve got a shot now, because of the two earthquakes, to resolve the conflict between Greece and Turkey. To accept Turkey into the EU will lock Turkey into the West for the next fifty years and that would help solve some problems if east of there goes sour. Two areas that I have wanted to make progress on -- the Aegean and India/Pakistan. We need to talk again, maybe before the OSCE, and I will tell you what I have been doing on it. But I think we’ve got a shot in the Aegean now.
The President: The Turks and Greeks are getting along better. The earthquakes made them see each other as human beings again. The problem is Cyprus. The Greeks think they were uprooted and can't go to visit their relatives' graves. It's got to be a strictly cold-blooded deal. We've done our part with military cooperation. We've got to get something that leads them on the path to Europe. Otherwise, they'll never do it because they think they need to "get along" like the Irish.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay Bill. (U)

The President: I will see you soon and thank you. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Tony Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Jenny McGee, Joel Ehrendreich, Robert Ford, Hoyt Yee and Richard Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: November 26, 1999, 11:55 a.m.-12:02 p.m. EST
Penn National Golf Course, Maryland

The President: Can you hear me? I am celebrating Thanksgiving with my entire family. The wind is blowing and the rain is going like crazy. I might as well be in England. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Where are you? (U)

The President: I am up at Camp David. I am out playing golf and it is raining like hell, and the wind is blowing. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Can I help in any way? (U)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

CONFIDENTIAL
Classified by: Robert A. Bradtke
Reason: 1.5(d)
Declassify On: 11/30/09
The President: I will do that and put a statement out immediately. (et)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Sounds to me like you got some pretty good language with Chirac on the European Security issue. (et)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I just don't want to give the isolationists here any encouragement. (et)

Prime Minister Blair: I appreciate that.

The President: I agree. You are doing the right thing, and I am behind you. (et)

Prime Minister Blair: I think it might be helpful, if at some stage, I came over and saw some of the people on the Hill and made a speech. (et)

The President: I agree with that. (et)

Prime Minister Blair: [Gap]

The President: Let me ask you one other thing. I hear Chirac wouldn't go along with the position you wanted to take on Cyprus. (et)

Prime Minister Blair: (et)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: No, I just heard something and it may not be right. The main thing, I know what Simitis wants you to say. But it would be good if it didn't leak until as close to the 10th as possible. That would give us a week to get these talks, (with Denktash), in New York, and I don't want to give him any excuse to leave.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: [GAP]

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That's good news.

Prime Minister Blair: Incidentally, I thought you did brilliantly in Florence. (U)

The President: Oh, thanks. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: You made a big impression on Jospin. (U)

The President: I tried to make him see that you and I were not threatening everything he believes in. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It would be really good to get together in the next few months. I have so much that I would like to go through with you. (U)

The President: When would be good? Is January better for you than February? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We will see what we can arrange. If it's not a summit in Bermuda, we can try something else. (U)

The President: I will look for something on the calendar. We will do a statement on devolution and will clear it with you in advance. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay Bill, all the best. (U)

The President: Okay, bye. (U)

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

NOTETAKERS: Michael Manning, Frank Jarosinski, Miguel Aguilo, and Jim Smith

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: December 16, 1999, 5:01 - 5:11 p.m. EST
Oval Office

The President: Tony, how are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: How are you getting on? (U)

The President: I'm fine. Prodi will be here tomorrow and I will spend some time with him. I think there will be some investments needed, and we'll carry a lot of it, but we may need EU help If things get resolved, it might come to a head in a couple of months. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: That would be marvelous. (U)

The President: That would be unbelievable, wouldn't it? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: When is Prodi getting there? Tomorrow, is he? (U)

The President: Yes. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: So they are going to come back in early January, and you think you can pull it together then? (U)

The President: Yes, I do. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: That would be fantastic. If you can put this and Northern Ireland together, it would be pretty good. (U)
The President: Yes. That would be a good deal. Trimble is coming in the next few days and I will see him. And we are doing what we can with Sinn Fein on the issue of IRA guns.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That's good. The only other thing I wanted to mention is that I think it is important to bring this Iraq resolution to a vote tomorrow. I know the French are going to abstain, but we've got to get something moving -- this thing is stuck on idle.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: You mean with Iraq?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: I don't know. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: We played around with this for so long, we should go for it.

The President: I think it will give us an idea of where to go next.

Prime Minister Blair: If we let it go much longer, it will get complicated for everybody.

The President: I agree.
Prime Minister Blair: It is sad for the people in Iraq. So is everything all right with you apart from this?

The President: Yes. I'm doing fine and I am delighted things are going well. We have to just keep working at it -- chipping away.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes. I'm doing fine and I am delighted things are going well. We have to just keep working at it -- chipping away.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Are you preparing to be a father again?

Prime Minister Blair: It was so unexpected.

The President: Yes, they have their good selves and their bad selves.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes, they have their good selves and their bad selves.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

The President: Yes, we have to keep working at it.

Prime Minister Blair: Are you getting any golf in?

The President: No, but I'll play soon. I have to get this work out of the way first.

I am really thrilled about the Helsinki decisions. The Turkey-EU thing is a big move and it will be a big help. It will bring resolution to other issues. The ESDI decision was good, too.

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: He's really good.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yep, I am quite worried about it, too.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: The in-crowd is making a lot of votes on Chechnya. Maybe it will change when people start seeing a lot of body bags, but as long as they keep getting the votes, they'll keep doing it.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:

Prime Minister Blair: Larry Summers came through here the other day. I had a good chat with him.

The President: He's a good man.

Prime Minister Blair: We talked about the IMF job and all the rest of it.

The President: We've got to get somebody good.

Prime Minister Blair: Really good.

The President: You take care of yourself. I will keep you posted on the Middle East stuff. It will take a little money.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Not yet. I will say something to Prodi, then we'll see.

Prime Minister Blair: All the best to you Bill.

The President: Thanks. Bye.

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with Prime Minister Blair of the United Kingdom (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Michael Manning, Rob Williams, Roger Merletti, James Smith, Dick Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: January 11, 2000, 4:22 to 4:45 p.m. EST
Air Force One

The President: Hello? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Hey, Tony. How are you? Happy New Year. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Same to you. I’m fine. (U)

The President: You getting ready for fatherhood? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Well, I’m psyched up. How are you doing? (U)

The President: I’m doing great. We’re moving into our new home and staying busy. I’ve just been out to the Grand Canyon, protecting another million acres of land, and Al’s doing better. So I’m feeling pretty good about things right now. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: He seems to be picking up. That’s great.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes, I’m going to see him tomorrow. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: -- a difficult situation -- (U)

The President: Hello, Tony? I can’t hear a word you’re saying. (U)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
Prime Minister Blair: Is this any better? (U)

The President: I can hear you fine, now. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Alright. Good.

The President: For one thing, he will. We've worked very hard on this, and I want them to give de Chastelain something credible to work with. I don't think they have rejected it out of hand, but de Chastelain and Mandelson have minimized the sense of a "deadline," certainly publicly, because I think we need to frame the issue for January not as meeting Trimble's deadline, but as the need for concrete steps for de Chastelain to say the IRA is on the way to meeting the timetable in the Good Friday agreement. I know that Adams is trying to keep everybody together, but one of the possibilities might be if they could be seen as responding to you, rather than a unionist deadline. If something could be done on the Patten report or something -- I want to make the argument he's doing this in response to that, in addition to the Good Friday Accord. (G)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: What is their reasoning? What reason are they giving? [redacted]

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: I agree with that. Let me work it and call you when I finish with him. ( suf)

Prime Minister Blair: Sorry to call and land this on you. ( suf)

The President: No, no. It's a big deal. I got wind of what they're saying and I'm livid. ( e)

Prime Minister Blair: ( e)

The President: Yes, I got it. I will call you after I talk to him. How did your meeting with the Iranian Foreign Minister go? ( e)

Prime Minister Blair: ( e)

The President: Hello? I lost you again. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: (U)

The President: Yeah, I agree with that. We have a tough week here. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: I think we have to keep reaching out toward them and just do our best. But I’m glad you saw him. Let me say very briefly, we had a good week here with the Israelis and the Syrians. There’s a lot of tough work to go but when they come back, I think you will see a break one way or another. I just hope and pray it works. I think we have some chance to achieve it, but we are not there by a long shot.

Prime Minister Blair: Best of luck on it. It’s a great effort you’re putting into it.

The President: I think we’ll make it.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, and Bill, I think we will see each other in Davos. You’re making a speech? (U)

The President: Yes. So, I will see you there, but I will call you as soon as I know something on this. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: That’s great. (U)

The President: Okay, Tony. Goodbye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Goodbye. (U)

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with Prime Minister Blair of the United Kingdom (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Deana Sutliff, Frank Jarosinski, James Smith, Roger Merletti and Dick Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: January 31, 2000, 2:29-2:50 p.m. EST
The Residence

The President: Hello. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hello, Bill. (U)

The President: Hello, Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I am really sorry to trouble you, but I thought I should bring you up to date on the Irish front. (U)

The President: It’s okay. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: What do you think is really going on in the IRA?

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Everyone else has made compromises. Everybody else did what they said. Everybody else already delivered first.

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Okay. So you want me to call Gerry and take one more whack at him? (?

Prime Minister Blair: I think it's a good idea.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: So this statement they were willing to make about the IRA, they can't even make that public? (?)
Prime Minister Blair:

Do you know what I mean?

The President: Yes, I agree with you. This is very conditional language.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: No, no, I think the IRA may not care if America withdraws its support, but I think Sinn Fein will be in a lot worse condition if its friends in Congress lay it all on them. He may not be able to do anything about it, maybe he even wants it in some manner. He can't say this,

Prime Minister Blair: That is the thing.
The President: I agree. I'll call Adams and do the best I can.

Prime Minister Blair: I agree. I'll call Adams and do the best I can.

The President: I'll call Adams and do the best I can.

Prime Minister Blair: I'll call Adams and do the best I can.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Yes. Even that is silly because they could always get more if they had any grounds. The radical Irish could get more. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: Of course they could tomorrow. I

The President: That is what I think. They are being pig-headed. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: No, no. (S)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Okay. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Right, Bill. (U)

The President: I’ll see what I can do. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Many thanks. Goodbye. (U)

The President: Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Frank Jarosinski, Deana Sutliff, Miguel Aguilo, Roger Merletti, Don Gentile and Richard Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: February 8, 2000, 11:15 to 11:42 a.m. EST
Oval Office

The President: Hello. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi Bill. (U)

The President: Hi Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: How are you doing? (U)

The President: I'm all right. I'm having a pretty good time. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: You just presented the budget. (U)

The President: I did it yesterday. Hillary just declared for the Senate in New York. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Your presidential race is very interesting. (U)

The President: Yes, it is. I can't tell where it's going yet. It's got a few turns left in the road. We have got to see if Bush has anything inside him to pull himself back up and respond to McCain. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Al seems to be running pretty well. (U)
The President: He is doing fine. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I think the State of the Union stuff and what I have read about the budget seems very interesting indeed. Well, I'm glad you're having a good time. (U)

The President: Yeah. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Well, let me tell you about mine. Here is where you can help me a bit.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: What's your reaction to the argument that they ought to be given more time since there was a such a delay in setting up the government?
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Of course I do. I'm just trying to think about how to keep this thing together. (8)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me ask you something. Do you think any argument they use is looking for a pretext for doing this and they wanted to make it clear they did not support such things and wanted to do it partly because of the terrorist incident in the north?

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)
The President: Well, did Adams give you any kind of opening when you asked for an act of reconciliation?

Prime Minister Blair: Right.

The President: Let me ask you, you and Bertie have agreed on what you’ve asked Adams to do?

Prime Minister Blair: Right.

The President: And if he does it, do you think you can sell it to Trimble?
Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Trimble is coming over here in a couple of days -- a week or 10 days, but it will be done by then. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: Yeah it will be done by then. What we need is a two-week breathing space. (S)

The President: Exactly what do you think it will take to get you two weeks? (S)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Okay. I'll get in touch with Gerry and Martin and see what we can do. I'll let you know. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm sorry to lay this on you. (S)

The President: No, no. I think about this more than anything else, besides the screw-ups in the Middle East. Let me ask you something on a much more mundane issue. Yesterday, I met with some cabinet members and Rodney Slater said we put some more ideas down to resolve the airport dispute we have with British Airways, USAIR and American Airlines. Would you take another look at that and see if we can get it done?

Prime Minister Blair: I'm not completely familiar with that.

The President: I know you're up to your ears in other things but we've been dealing with this for years and it's sort of a big deal here. Rodney told me he put some more stuff down on the table. In a political season, it would be big over here to get this open sore resolved. If you could have somebody take a look at it. I have never seen him more agitated about anything. He is just trying to get it resolved.

Prime Minister Blair: Sure, I will have a look.

The President: Okay, I will get on this. How is mother doing?

Prime Minister Blair: Fine. She's getting pretty large. Are you going to come over incidentally?

The President: Let me tell you what we are trying to work out. You want me to come, don't you?

Prime Minister Blair: I'm desperate to sit down and have a proper talk with you.

The President: I'm trying to figure out what the best time is because we have to do this Third Way thing in Germany and there might be time to run to Russia. We're trying to resolve bilateral issues with Russia and kind of get this Chechnya thing resolved. Putin has enormous potential, I think. I think he's very smart and thoughtful. I think we can do a lot of good with him. I'm trying to figure how to do all these things and come to London because Cherie's time is coming close. I want to come when it would cause you the least problems and try to leave open the option, if you need me to, to go to Ireland. I want to come and do you the most good.

Prime Minister Blair: It's a good idea in any sort of circumstances. They would be delighted to see you. Well, Cherie is due on May 20. I mean, anytime is good.
The President: Obviously, I have to leave you a couple of weeks on the front. If we decided to do it afterward, how much time do you need for paternity leave? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I don’t know that I would need much time, more than a week, on either end of it. We’d love for you to come over and there is lots to discuss. (U)

The President: Fathers get that in Britain. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I don’t know if I’ll do too much of it. (U)

The President: I just don’t want to screw it up. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It would be quite nice for you to come and see them. (U)

The President: I would love to come afterwards and get to see the baby. Let me see what I can do. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay Bill, we will be in touch. I would love to see you come over. (U)

The President: Okay, see you soon. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Doug Bayley, Robin Rickard, Don Cheramie, Roger Merletti, Don Gentile and Dick Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: February 11, 2000, 12:38 - 12:49 p.m. EST
Oval Office

The President: Hello. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bill. (U)

The President: Hey. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: How are you doing? (U)

The President: I'm okay. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bill, sorry to trouble you again but I thought I would bring you up to date with what has happened.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes. (U)
The President: What about Trimble? Where is he on this?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: But if you haven't announced it, can't you...

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I think you ought to go to Trimble and try to work it out.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Can't you go to Trimble today?
The President: If you can get Trimble to say okay...

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: If we could get to him today you could have this all resolved by Monday.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We can't run the risk of this thing unraveling over the weekend just because of the timing of it.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: If we don't have some move by you and Trimble today or tomorrow, this thing could unravel over the weekend. How much does Trimble know about this?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What I'm suggesting is we tell him what they said and get him to make some noise in tomorrow's papers saying, you know, there is movement here, something where he can reach out to them. Or call Adams or something. You need them to connect before they go to bed tonight. I just think that something has to be done before the papers come out and all hell breaks loose...

Prime Minister Blair: Okay.
The President: ...at least the IRA got off their backsides and did something half reasonable. (8)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, I think to make that really work we need some sort of signal from Trimble that he believes this is all possible. (8)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree, but my problem is that if he waits until next week...

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I don't want this thing to get away from you.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: If you could get it tonight that would be wonderful. I know it is a pain in the rear end, but I'm scared that if this thing drifts for three days...

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree with that, but if Trimble can give them an excuse to do that it would be great. (8)

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: We will go to work on our side. Have someone call us to let us know what Trimble said. We need to know what we are going to say to Adams when we call him. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, thanks Bill. Bye. (U)

The President: Fine. Goodbye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Deana Sutliff,
Frank Jarosinski, Sean Tarver, Don Gentile

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: March 6, 2000, 12:56 - 1:04 p.m. EST
Oval Office

The President: Hello, Tony. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Hello, Bill, how are you? (U)

The President: Hi, Tony. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Look, Bill, I’ve got to do this live television thing in five minutes? (U)

The President: Okay, just talk. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]
The President: Yes. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: [E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)]

The President: Let me tell you what I told Schroeder this morning. I talked to him for forty minutes this morning. The Prime Minister Blair: This is a really important job.

The President: It is really important. It's not just political. You need to talk to him.

Prime Minister Blair: He's in that frame of mind, is he?

The President: Yes. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: There are a couple of Germans who are qualified, but he can't get them to accept the job.

The President: Absolutely. I can't afford to be the skunk at the garden party. I have got to have some help.
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: He is going to call you. He is calling Kwasniewski first. I told him "this is going to look bad for you. It can't look like you and I made a deal and gagged Europe and infuriated all of the developing countries."

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I will say that to him. I just wanted to check with you. (S)

The President:

Prime Minister Blair: Look, Bill, I've got to go. (U)

The President: Go. We also need to talk about Kosovo.
Prime Minister Blair: We need to talk about Kosovo and we need to talk about Northern Ireland as well. (S)

The President: Call me in the next couple of days. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. (U)

The President: Good Bye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Good Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with Prime Minister Blair of the United Kingdom (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Don Gentile, Joel Ehrendreich, Deana Sutliff, Frank Jarosinski, Dick Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: March 14, 2000, 1:05-1:29 p.m. EST
The Residence

The President: Hello. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Can we talk about Kosovo a little bit? (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, sure. (E)

The President: Let me give you my thoughts. We’ve got violence everyday, KFOR attrition, UN operations too slow, and we’re coming up on spring which is a most dangerous time.

Basically, you and I gave it a lot of high-level attention during the air campaign. Now, you’re worried about elections, I’m worried about elections and the Middle East. Somehow, we have got to get this operation on a sounder footing before Milosevic challenges us. (E)

I think three things have to be done. We have the biggest stake in this because we believed in it. You’ll be around after I’m gone and this will come back and bite you in the behind. First of all, we’ve got to make sure KFOR has enough forces to counter the threat and then we’ve got to make sure the UN gets funding to do the job and then get enough police there to take pressure off KFOR. KFOR is getting weaker when it should be getting stronger. We have to look at our pledged force levels and have a smooth transition when the new KFOR commander takes over. If not, I think Milosevic, who seems to be getting stronger in Serbia, will take it as a sign of weakness and then we’ll be back in conflict.
The second thing is that we have to redouble our efforts with the Kosovar Albanians. We sent the two best people with connections there this week to deliver that message. Then, we've got to send more police. We're sending more police this month, from 490 to 550.

Prime Minister Blair: I'm sending more police this month, from 490 to 550.

The President: That's good. Let's talk about UNMIK. They are crippled by the funding shortage. I'm trying to do what we can to increase our contributions to improve the infrastructure, and I hope you can give some sort of concrete pledge as well. If you and I won't do it, nobody will. We can give up to $500 million if other people kick in some money. I've got Republicans in the Senate trying to pass some bill saying that we can't give more money until the Europeans do. We need some help. We have given out 100 percent of the money we promised to give, but I think the EU has only given 40 percent of what was committed.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: At some point down the road, we'll have to deal with this Kosovo status deal, but we have to get your people and mine together and get a set of common talking points. We need to call Chirac and others to kind of muscle this up a bit. Are you okay with that?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.

The President: And a lot more money.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes.
The President: Let me ask you. I think the trick is and the problem is that authority is too dispersed. Is there any way we can get Kofi to somehow empower them? The problem is that Kouchner works for the UN, KFOR is a UN force, and we're here not wanting to get in the way, but not wanting to screw up.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I think the other. You know, my sense is the Stability Pact, because you're putting up the money, would be no problem there. What is Kouchner's relationship with the French? If they tell him what to do, will he do it? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I think so, yes.

The President: I agree with that. We will work on it from our side and can talk about it. I just think this is so important. I think this is part of the calls you'll make next week in Lisbon. We need to have our people gaming out what we will or won't do if Milosevic sends people into the northern part of Kosovo allegedly to protect the Serbs. What are we going to do if there is a real battle in southern Serbia and what are we going to do about Montenegro if he invades them? (S)
Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely. Okay. I agree. (5)

The President: Everyone of them is a tough problem. No one wants to do anything, including us. On the other hand, if we have an aggressive response in these other three areas early, we not only minimize these problems but also minimize him doing anything out of line in Montenegro. (8)

Prime Minister Blair: I agree. I believe that the window of opportunity is starting to close. (6)

The President: I really like this idea.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

The President: Did you have a good trip to Russia? The press on it was very good. (7)

Prime Minister Blair: (8)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: (9)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: I don’t know. (8)

The President: (9)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely. (8)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: What does he think about Chechnya? (8)

Prime Minister Blair: (8)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: It's a really rough situation over there and in a lot of Central Asian countries bordering there. It was so typically Russian ham-handed. (9)

Prime Minister Blair: (8)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: We had a good joint statement on the Genome project -- thank you for that. Go see the Queen. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. All the best. See you soon.

(U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with Prime Minister Blair of The United Kingdom (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Deana Sutliff, Jenny McGee, Miguel Aguiló, Don Gentile, Rob Hargis and Richard Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: April 19, 2000, 1:05-1:40 p.m. EDT Oval Office

Prime Minister Blair: Hello. (U)

The President: Hello, "dad," how are you doing? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I am preparing. (U)

The President: You know, after January I'm available for babysitting duties. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I wouldn't say that or you'll be doing it. (U)

The President: You said you wanted to continue my work with the Third Way, and this is it: helping Blair balance work and family. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: I could do with a bit of help, I tell you. Cherie is in great form but just keeps getting bigger and bigger. I tell you, just the thought and I feel as if my life's about to begin again. (U)

The President: It is going to be interesting. Given the way the world is changing, it'll be a completely different childhood than the one your others had. Anyway, it is a great thing. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Right, Bill, we'll put you down on the babysitting list now, mate. (U)

The President: You've got a deal. (U)
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes, I really want to hear about that. I'm going to see him.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We have a lot to discuss. I agree with that. I think we'll get more out of this guy since he just started his term and if he thinks we're trying to help him achieve his objectives.

Prime Minister Blair: That's right.
The President: I think to get there we have to somehow demonstrate, number one, that it is only useful as a defense, even assuming it works and assuming it meets the criteria I set out. Basically it's a defense against people who can lob a few missiles at you rather than a lot. We need to show that those cooperating in the nonproliferation movement are actually benefiting, and I need to keep working on it. There's got to be a way to do that. I think there is a way to make sure all the countries that are cooperating on this do benefit. I need to keep working on it.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I know. I used to have these arguments with Yeltsin all the time when we were looking at expanding NATO. I asked him once, "Do you really believe that if we got a foothold in Poland we would bomb western Russia?" He said, "No, I don't, but there are a lot of old ladies out in the country who do." He was dead serious. I think it's important to understand their mentality on this. They are still affected by Napoleon, Hitler, and the way the Cold War came to end, and about the way the Soviet Empire collapsed. Yeltsin was much more enthusiastic about this in some ways than his progressive successors. He wound up mortally hating communism, but still believing in Mother Russia. All these guys do, and we’ve got to be sensitive about that. (S)

But we can’t walk away from something that can keep a lot of us alive. I want to talk to you about it in greater detail, maybe before I go to see him. We can’t get this done without serious adverse implications unless both Russia and Europe believe this can be something that benefits all of us. Since it’s a defense system, I’m committed to that. I think there might be some way to plug him into that. (S)

I am still formulating my ideas on it, but let’s talk one more time. Let’s do that first before my meeting with him. I’ll really read up on it. I will talk to you about it one more time before I leave. (S)

Another thing I was going to say about the tax system is that they have to keep working on it. Before I became president, I was there in 1990 when Boris Yeltsin was elected president when it was still nominally the Soviet Union and then he got re-elected head of the whole deal. I knew a guy who ran a McDonald’s restaurant there, and we were talking about this tax problem. He said “Look, by the time we pay our taxes -- federal, local, etc. -- our effective tax rate is 85 percent. Because it’s McDonalds, I can still end up making a hell of a lot of money here. However, my nominal Russian competitor pays an effective tax rate of 5 percent. But there’s almost no other kind of economic activity you can imagine, except maybe for the energy sector, that can sustain that kind of tax burden.” (L)

He wasn’t pleading for help. I was just a governor at the time. But later, after I was President, we talked again. If they want to get a huge amount of foreign investment, they need to rationalize their tax system and treat everybody the same. Otherwise, they are never going to be competitive. That is essentially the problem with the tax system and their regulatory problems. (L)

I think all the internal energy problems they’ve got have caused and cost untold billions of dollars of investment. Their whole view of energy is caught up in the notion of sovereignty, and we’ve had trouble cracking that nut. Al Gore couldn’t move Chernomyrdin very far on that stuff, but I still think they’ve got just staggering potential. (L)

The other thing I think would be helpful to do without being patronizing is to do something about their health system.
They're the only country in the world where their life expectancy is declining because of unsanitary conditions, not because of doctors. They still have a fairly large number of good doctors over there. It's so embarrassing that it's difficult to talk about. I'm convinced it's one of the things that really demoralizes the country.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair: I agree.

The President: I might be completely wrong, but my gut tells me he could do wonders with his popularity if he could make some progress on the health care problem.

Prime Minister Blair: I'm sure you're right.

The President: Yes, God, yes.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Let me ask you this. Is there any way to link the decommissioning with the Good Friday accord in a concrete way that doesn't stick them on the date? Are there any up-front confidence building measures they can take, short of a bonfire, which they still seem reluctant to do?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We did something like that in Bosnia, too.

Prime Minister Blair: Exactly.

The President: Are they going to do it?
The President: Well, I’m ready to do it. Do you think that Gerry and Martin realize that after this last vote, Trimble can’t survive if they don’t do something more?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Absolutely. Not only that, I just can’t conceive how anybody thinks this thing could go forward without the unionists. Gerry Adams told me in private he thought there was no way forward without Trimble. They’ve got to know.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: It’s inconceivable. The whole premise of the Good Friday Accord was consent. It’s a fraud if you get rid of them.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: What are they going to give back?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Really?
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: You can't make that dog hunt. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: It isn't realistic. (C)

The President: I think you're onto some good ideas. We'll keep talking to them. We have our channels open and when you want me to do something, I will.

thing may be happening in Northern Ireland. It might not happen again, there is so much prosperity, but it's one hell of a gamble to take over basically, what are you going to do with a few arms? You're not asking them to give them all up right now and they can always replace what they lose. They can always go back. It's so bizarre. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: It is. (C)

The President: I know you offered to meet with the IRA and they said no. My only other suggestion is whether you or someone on your behalf could open a channel of communication with others in Sinn Fein/IRA besides. In a way, at some point, it gets hard for the leadership to make a case, and I have the feeling that the rank and file read the newspapers and are sophisticated on one level but in the absence of personally engaging with someone who can explain what's going on out there, it's pretty tough. I know I have told you before, I think a lot of these guys can't imagine how their lives are going to be different if this thing works out. I don't know how to do it, and I don't know if I can help you, but that's the only suggestion I have. It's a pretty narrow funnel you're pouring all this in, and Gerry and Martin have a heavy load. Some may think, well, Martin is the Minister of Education and Martin has a nice life, what's in it for us? Maybe there's nothing to this, but I think you should keep thinking about this.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: If I had your blessing, I'd be happy to do it. I don't know if they would do it -- if they would talk to an American either.

Prime Minister Blair:

I get the feeling there is a huge gap, you know.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Give some thought to it. I'll have our people talk to your people about how to establish some sort of dialog through a British or American contact and talk these things through and give some thought to what this will be like -- what are they going to do with their lives, how will it be different? I may be overstating this, but it strikes me that if we just could get them to think about how their lives would be different if this worked out. I now believe Gerry and Martin want this to work. But, if they brought it to a vote and jammed the vote and caused half of them to bolt to some other faction -- we don't want that. It's worth some leakage, but not much. It's easy for me to say this, because I don't have to deal with the aftermath of the bombs, but you would be right back in the soup.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: You know how badly I want this to work. I really think it's important. You have a good economy and good social reform. And, if you could get a breakthrough here, I think you would secure your place and your party's place for a long time to come. You could help New Labor in ways we can't even evaluate. I just want to do whatever I can for you before I have to leave here.

Prime Minister Blair: When are we going to see you? (C)

The President: I'll see you for sure in Berlin. I'd like to come to the UK and to Ireland before I go, but I want to be flexible on timing. I want to come see you when I can do the most good. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: ________________

The President: I've got a lot of things to talk to you about. The main thing I don't want to do is something harmful to the peace process, and it's not too good for me to look like I'm taking a sentimental journey. I want to come and do something. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: ________________

The President: God if you could do that, that'd be great. Let me know when you want us to weigh in the next couple of weeks. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: How is Hillary? (U)

The President: She's doing well. I think she's going to win! She is starting to sound like a real politician. She's always been a good speaker, but now she's got to where she can get up and give a real political speech and sound like a politician. I'm beginning to sound like a meandering old man. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Not quite. And Al? He's doing pretty well, too? (C)

The President: God, yes. He's doing much better. I expect him to win. We have a big problem here. The cultural aversion of white, married, Protestants to voting Democratic is a real problem -- and one we have to overcome. Bush is a skilled politician, but he is not ready to be president, maybe not ever, certainly not now. But they want it real bad and they've got lots of money and lots of media access and they are not freshly discredited. And in this level of economic performance some tend to believe it's automatic and nobody's going to screw it up, a lot of people expect it -- think it is automatic. It is going to take a lot of discipline -- but I think Al will win. God knows I'm doing everything I can to get it done without being counterproductive.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Whew. Well, yes. We're making a little progress on the Africa trade bill. (gap) I may run over to Nigeria in a few months. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: But better gay than sad. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: But I think we've given a lot of evidence. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: If you are, you've got a hell of a cover-up! You are doing the best you can do. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. (U)

The President: Thank you, man. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bye. All the best. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair
Notetakers: Joel Ehrendreich, Jenny McGee, Miguel Aguilo, and Richard Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 4, 2000, 6:26-6:34 p.m. EDT
Columbus, Ohio

Prime Minister Blair: Hello. (U)
The President: Hello, Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi. Thanks for calling and speaking to me.

The President: Sounds like what we did in Bosnia. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: ...[gap]...
The President: I heard it all. It sounded good to me. I like this idea of third-party verification. That way the IRA keeps the nominal title to their weapons, so they didn't decommission, but they did.

Prime Minister Blair: Exactly.

The President: I like it. If the IRA will take it, it's a good deal. Then you'll put the government back up as soon as possible?

Prime Minister Blair: Right.

The President: How about "Formerly Royal Police Service?"

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: You don't want me to call Gerry or Martin now?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That's good.

Prime Minister Blair: There we are. We're trying our best. I storage with third-party verification. I think that’s about the best we can do right now. It is going to come down to whether both believe it would be a crying shame to let May come and go and basically junk the Good Friday Accord. (S)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: You’ll find a way, and I’ll be glad to call them. We’ve kept in touch with their people. You’ve got a really good proposal. I don’t see how you could make it better than it is. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Anything else? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: No. I will keep in close touch, if I may. (C)

The President: You can call me in the middle of the night if you want, if this thing gets hot. You know I care deeply about it. I will do what I can. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: If you don’t mind, I may have to do that. (C)

The President: Okay, I’m eagerly looking forward to it. Okay, bye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Deana Sutliff, Frank Jarosinski, Joel Ehrendreich, Matthew Sibley, Don Gentile, Richard Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: May 15, 2000, 5:20 - 5:34 p.m. EDT
The Residence

Prime Minister Blair: Hello. (U)
The President: Hey, Tony. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. How are you doing? (U)
The President: I'm great. I'm watching the end of an old Peter Sellers movie. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Which one? (U)
The President: I can't tell. I've only seen about five minutes. But Herbert Long just disappeared along with a castle. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Pink Panther, I think. (U)
The President: I think it's the second one. It's funny as hell. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: He was so funny, Peter Sellers. Anyway... (U)
The President: I just wanted to put you in good humor since you're dealing with Northern Ireland. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: I just wanted to bring you up to date.
The President: What does your legislation say right now?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: When do you have to move on this?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Weren't they saying before -- when you and I were talking, I had a copy of the other legislation -- weren't they claiming that they...

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: But weren't the republicans saying if you did that, unionists would just say that all time, and, therefore, the Catholics wouldn't join?
Prime Minister Blair:

The President: But the real fact is you would take it off.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me see what I can do. I'll mull it over a bit. Let me ask you this. What do you think should be done in Sierra Leone? Your guys have done a good job there.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: We're talking about it here. My take on this is that we could strengthen the UN hand if the Nigerians go in, and you and whoever can stay in the coastal areas and the city, but you don't want to be subjected to being picked off in those jungles by those crazy people. They've got all these young kids they've brutalized, hopped up on drugs. I think if we can defeat that kind of thing, it would be a good thing to do.

Prime Minister Blair:
The President: Yes.

Prime Minister Blair: [insert]

The President: Yes, we're taking them in. [E]

Prime Minister Blair: [insert]

The President: I think you're doing fine. I'm just worried about whether we're doing enough and how to do it. I think having you there and securing the airport is about what you should be doing. You don't have enough people to venture out, and I would hate to see you go out and be shot into fodder. I think we need more troops. They will be scared if the Nigerians come in there in full force and the Indians are willing to do so. I may want to call you again if you think there is something else we should do. Let me know if we can help you. You've done a good thing.

Prime Minister Blair: [insert]

The President: I agree with that. You keep chewing on that. I'll get back to you on that and on the Irish thing. [E]
The President: It's too bad the unionists won't let you kick the can down the road a bit. If you could, the issue would become relatively less important to both sides once things are up and running. (c)

Prime Minister Blair: (E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d) [Confidential]

The President: How's mama Cherie doing? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine. She's about a week away from producing. (U)

The President: Is she in a bad humor about being big? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: She's okay. She's been in court today. (U)

The President: Good! (U)

Prime Minister Blair: She's going to court to take on the government over parental leave. Don't even talk to me about it. She is great, but she could produce at any time. (U)

The President: That's great. Alright, I'll see you soon. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, Bill. (U)

The President: Thanks. Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT:  Telcon with Prime Minister Blair of the United Kingdom (U)

PARTICIPANTS:  The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers:  Amy Swarm and Sean Tarver

DATE, TIME AND PLACE:  May 27, 2000, 12:27-12:44 p.m. EDT
The Residence

Prime Minister Blair:  Hi, Bill. (U)

The President:  Hey. Congratulations! What a good day. (U)

Prime Minister Blair:  Yes, it was good, but tight. (G)

The President:  Trimble was right. He had to go back to all those crazies in his party.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:  Yes. (L)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President:  Yes. I talked to Adams this morning. He is a little bit peeved about Trimble talking about house-training him, but, I said, "Oh hell, it's part of the deal to get the government back up." I told him, "Look Gerry, I will support you. You've got to get the Patten thing, but you also have to do those CBMs." (L)

Prime Minister Blair:  Yes.
The President: I think that is exactly what the republicans are thinking, so you have to talk to them. There is no question they will completely, once they move forward with their CBM, cut the ground from under the "no" unionists. (EQ)

Prime Minister Blair: I think that is right.

The President: How's fatherhood coming? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It's different. (U)

The President: You're not coming to Berlin? Are you still going to be on family leave? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It's difficult. I really wanted to come, but it is difficult to leave Cherie home alone on weekends without anyone. (U)

The President: I think that is the right thing. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It should be a good do and then you go on to Russia? (U)

The President: Yes. What I am trying to do. I guess you saw the sort of crazy speech Bush gave last week. (G)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I did. (G)

The President: [gap] He didn't promise to unilaterally reduce below START III levels. He just promised to cut them below START
II levels. Hell, I've already done that. This is just crazy. I am terrified these guys will get in and say Reagan was right about Star Wars. And then you'll get the Chinese building a thousand weapons, after all the work I did passing China Permanent Normal Trade Relations.

Prime Minister Blair: Congratulations, that was brilliant.

President: It was a great thing, but too hard. The only problem we have in this country is that our business community always kills legislation. Anyway, I am just so afraid that all the benefits will be squandered if Bush wins the elections. I still think we have a 50 percent or better chance to win.

Prime Minister Blair: Quite close, isn't it?

President: It shouldn't be. White married Protestants don't think they should be voting for Democrats, partly because of the gun issue that Al and I are taking on. All the specifics people agree with. [gap] it is crazy. You can take a poll about loopholes. Sixty-five percent to 30 percent say yes, but even in New York where it is more liberal than the rest of the country, if Hillary were endorsed by this group that did the Million Mom March, it's like 40 to 40 percent. A lot of the country likes it when we are in, but they have a hard time admitting it. My job approval was like 65 percent. Bush is really smart. The campaign against McCain was the most vicious in modern memory. He has these right wing foot soldiers do his dirty work, so he can be nice. I think Al had not the best couple of months, but now he is in good form and doing well. And we have the record and the people. I think he'll do fine in debates, but I still think he has a better than 50 percent chance of winning this thing. If he doesn't, then you will have to do a lot of heavy lifting. I think Al is sort of where I am on this stuff. Of course, if Bush wins, whatever I do with Putin, they can reverse. If we just came out and said we are not going to do this now and we are not going to do it until we have technology everybody buys into and believes in, but we have to do research -- if I did that, all I would do is make Al vulnerable. There is an article by Hugo somebody in one of your papers, saying he thought we were nuts.

Prime Minister Blair: Hugo Young?

President: Did you see the piece?

Prime Minister Blair: No, but I had it summarized for me.
The President: It would be a good thing if national missile defense worked on a broader basis. If it gives people the impression that it would work, people would believe that we could use the thing and they would be less likely to attack. But you've got to figure out if you deploy and if you got beyond the second phase and it could stop 50 or 60 warheads, what position would that put the Chinese in. I don't think a lot of people say let's go full tilt on this thing. The goal ought to be to get rid of these damn offensive weapons and direct our energies toward that. In the meantime, we must not do anything in the interim to increase the chances these weapons would be used. (E)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: The main thing is, the United States should take a position that we have got to do this in the context of our larger objectives. I am working with Al in an effort to preserve the arms control regime. If we could do it, it would be good. The problem I have with the Republican approach is they would deploy this big Star Wars in the sky system and an adversary can get under it if they want. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: One thing Republicans say is that nobody believes we can have bad intentions, but we are the only people who have ever dropped one of these weapons. My objective is to try and leave office with the thing in the best possible state in terms of a decent outcome. I am trying to do this deal with Putin to foreclose the possibility of going to any bigger system which would undermine arms control. It might not work. We might not be able to do it. But I still think we are going to win this thing. We might not. It might be close. I always believed Al is going to win. I am going to try to make it difficult for Bush to go off half-cocked on this Star Wars deal. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. Any chance of seeing you? (E)

The President: I hope so. I would still like to come over there. Now that we have the Northern Ireland government back up, maybe I can go by Ireland again. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: I think it would be good. I have some ideas on this stuff. It would be nice to sit down and talk in detail. It would also be nice to see you in Ireland. (E)
The President: I didn’t want to go until it makes sense all around in terms of the peace process and your schedule. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Why don’t we see what dates could be arranged. (C)

The President: I want to see your baby. I am quite good with babies, you know. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: He is a great guy. So good. A little star, really. And Cherie is doing great. We are going off to mass now on Saturday night, to try to avoid the media. If it is not too much of a hassle, to meet quite soon would be good and we could use Ireland as the reason and have a proper talk at the same time. Thanks for all your help again. When do you leave? (C)

The President: I depart the United States on Monday. I have an EU thing in Portugal, then on to Russia, and then a brief stop in the Ukraine. I go to Portugal, Berlin, Russia, Ukraine, and then home. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: So you leave next week? (U)

The President: Yes. All right, tell Cherie hello. It is a great day for you. The way you keep everybody talking is amazing to me. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Occasionally it is amazing to me, too. One day at a time. (C)

The President: All right man. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: All the best. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Robin Rickard, Robert Williams, Brad Mynatt, and Richard Norland.

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: September 5, 2000, 6:46 - 6:53 p.m. EDT
The Residence

The President: Hello, Tony? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Where are you? Are you here? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I'm just driving in from the airport now, complete with baby. (U)

The President: Really? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, Cherie is coming with me and making a speech in New York at some lawyer thing, so we have to bring the baby with us. (U)

The President: That's great. I hope I get to see your baby. Where are you staying? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: [Redacted]

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Here's the problem we've got. First of all, I won't do anything until I see you. I don't want to jam you in public. Our guys tell me that Lott will basically shut down the Senate and not even do China if we don't do something, and now our Foreign Sales Corporation plan was rejected. It is not a political thing with me. I am not running for election, and I don't want to do anything to hurt you, but, on the other hand, I can't take the risk they will shut the Senate down. The real damage will be if they walk away from the China issue. That is my problem. We ought to talk tomorrow. We are going to have dinner tomorrow, right? —(E)

Prime Minister Blair: Right. (U)

The President: Why don't we talk a little and see if there is any reasonable prospect. If I could just get either one of these things resolved. They are killing me on the FSC and the other thing. They know, or at least I know, you tried to help us on both of these things. I just can't let them shut the thing down on me. (E)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: There might be. Let me talk to our people. Why don't we talk again tomorrow. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay.

The President: The real problem on the banana issue is a feeling over here that there is an Anglo-Irish company that is the main beneficiary of not resolving the issue. That is adding to the heat. But the issue isn't a political one for me. We were able to avoid putting cashmere on the list last time. You had those elections in Scotland, and I took a lot of crap the last time. It is not a political thing with me, it's just that I've got to do business with these people for the next six weeks. I can't run the risk of having this blamed on me or being accused of acting on the basis of a personal relationship, and I can't do anything to hurt Al. I think he is going to win, but it is tight as a tick. (E)
The President: So when we tried to run it by them that you were trying to help us, they said how can that be, this Anglo-Irish company is the main beneficiary? Normally I do what I want but Congress has a big oar in the water. (gap) Why don’t you talk to your folks, and I’ll talk to you tomorrow. Maybe it will be alright to call Lott, what the hell. This has been dragging on so long. (gap) about as long as I can, and I can’t run the risk they would use that as a pretext against something as profoundly important as China. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Okay, (gap) (U)

The President: I think that is quite possible. I know the heat they are getting, and I know where it is coming from. But it might be helpful, if we could have any indication we could get that or the FSC thing resolved. Both are hanging out there feeding on each other. And, in the Senate, it is not totally confined to the Republicans either. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I totally understand, okay. (C)

The President: Okay, so I get to see your baby? Alright, I will see you tomorrow. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Alright, Bill, all the best. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Rob Hargis, Tina Yarmchuk, Kurt Van der Walde, and Don Cheramie

DATE, TIME AND PLACE October 12, 2000, 9:11 – 9:19 a.m. EDT
Chappaqua, NY

The President: Hello? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hello Bill? (U)

The President: Hey, Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It's a terrible situation. It's terrible what happened to your servicemen. I want to express my sympathies. If there is anything I can do, I am glad to. It looks like it is spinning out of control.

The President: I tried for days. We had two good days.

... Now, we don't know who blew up our ship. We know there have been terrorist elements training for something like this.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

... Now you have these instabilities working against each other.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Let me tell you what my plans are. I'm in New York, we just celebrated our 25th anniversary. What a romantic background. I'm on my way back to the office. It will take about 2 hours. I will call you back when I get there. I've tried to put something concrete together for two days. I'll get back to you when I get to Washington. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: I'm going off to the EU Council in Biarritz.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: If you need anything from us, please pass it to me. (S)

The President: I will. Right now what we need is a non-judgmental break. For God's sake, let's get past this and start talking. I'll know more later. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: Let us know what we can do. (S)

The President: Hell, in 100 days you can call me to go to places like Biarritz to go skiing. God really doesn't want me to ease my way out. (S)

Prime Minister Blair: Take care Bill. (U)
The President: Bye.

Prime Minister Blair: Bye.

--- End of Conversation ---
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Robert Hargis, Don Cheramie, Tina Yarmchuk, Kurt Van der Walde, and Dick Norland

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: October 13, 2000, 3:36-3:59 p.m. EDT
Oval Office

The President: Hi Tony. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi Bill. How are you? (U)

The President: Well, we haven’t been sleeping much, but we’ve been on the phone for the past two days. We may be near putting something together.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

Prime Minister Blair: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(d)

The President: E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

We’ve been doing this around the clock for two days now, and I finally gave up and went to work on the

SECRET
Reason: 1.5(d)
Declassify on: 10/15/2015
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)
The President: Okay. Good-bye. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Jenny McGee, Rob Hargis, Dianne Ruschaupt, Jill Sandler and Dick Norland.

DATE, TIME AND PLACE November 10, 2000, 3:40 - 3:54 p.m. EDT
Army-Navy Country Club

The President: Hello? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hi, Bill. (U)

The President: Hi, Tony. How are you? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Fine. How are you? Hillary just did brilliantly. (U)

The President: She did great. And it looks to me like Al’s got the votes, but we don’t know if they’ll get counted. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Well, what’s going to happen? (E)

The President: I don’t know. They still have to count 5,000 overseas ballots. It’s a very confusing situation. There was an illegal ballot in Florida, where they use a punch card system. The Bush people are trying to bully him. Some votes went to Buchanan and there are 19,000 ballots for him that were disqualified, and they were African-Americans. Usually, you’d just say “tough,” but here you’ve got a situation where Gore won the popular vote. He picked up five points in five days and also pulled out a huge minority vote, I just hope he can pull it out. Last night we had former Presidents Ford, Bush, Carter, and Lyndon Johnson’s widow, and we all made reassuring sounds to the public. (E)
Prime Minister Blair: Where is public opinion?

The President: Most want it settled but they don't understand the issue. They do not understand how clearly these votes were for Gore. They cite Nixon not challenging in Illinois. The difference is that if Nixon had won Illinois, he still would not have won the electoral vote. It's really bogus. Hillary is doing great, happy as a clam. I am really proud of her.

Prime Minister Blair: Well, Hillary did wonderful. Give her our love. She was just fantastic during the campaign. She was so strong and brave. I thought she was just great.

The President: She was.

Prime Minister Blair: Well, Cheri sends her love. Hillary was brilliant.

The President: Yeah, she was the "Little Engine That Could." I wish you were with me, I'm playing golf. The three guys with me are on the green right now.

Prime Minister Blair: The thing I wanted to say to you was on Northern Ireland. I think if you still want and are able to come over, I think you could play a part in putting this together. We had a bit of a breakdown, but it should not be terminal because both sides want this to happen now. There are certain things we have to do and certain things the republicans have to do.

Trimble is really getting it done in the government as the government is working well.

The President: I saw what he said about no North-South cooperation before they reengage. But the problem now is that the IRA can't appear to be caving in to a unionist demand.

Prime Minister Blair:
I think it would be great if you came over, and people would really welcome it. I had a word with Trimble, and I think he is keen about it as well. He is desperate to make this work and so is McGuinness. We need something new, something different to come in and sort it out a bit.

The President: What's your thought?

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: When do you want me to come?

Prime Minister Blair: Sometime in early December.

The President: We are working on this agreement with North Korea to try to get them to end their missile program, and I leave this weekend for Vietnam. It sounds weird but it will be hard for me to take two more trips but I might be able to do them both.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Do you want us to leave some of those deportees here?

Prime Minister Blair:
In the end it would be up to you if you can do this, but I think it is possible to put together a deal, and you wouldn't just be visiting, but you would actually be helping to get the deal done.

The President: Do you want me to do some work on this and see if I can come?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. We can meet the Irish in the next two or three days to try to get a common position with them, and we will brief your guys on it. I can send you a note with the elements of the deal on it.

The President: That would be wonderful. You know I want to if I can. I really want to get this missile deal in Korea done, it will make us all a lot safer. I'll tell Hillary that you called.

Prime Minister Blair: Thank you. (U)

The President: How is your baby doing? (U)

The Prime Minister: He's perfect, just great. (U)

The President: Wonderful. (U)

The Prime Minister: I'll get to work on this. All the best. (U)

The President: Bye-bye. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with the British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Sean Tarver, Frank Jarosinski, Jill Sandler, Clark Lystra, Dick Norland and Ian Bowles

DATE, TIME AND PLACE November 23, 2000, 9:10-10:06 a.m. EST
Camp David, Maryland

The President: Hello, Tony? (U)
Prime Minister Blair: Hello, Bill. (U)

The President: Hey, Tony, How are you? I'm fine. (U)
Prime Minister Blair: I’m fine. I’m in good form, but how are you? (U)

The President: I'm doing great. I had a good trip to Vietnam. I'm still jet lagged. I guess it's just old age. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It was a great visit. (U)

The President: It was great for us and generally for encouraging a force for change within Vietnam. They tried to discourage the people, but they came out in droves. Sixty percent of the country is under thirty years old, so they are all kids. Most of them are thinking about tomorrow and there are not a lot of elderly people. The Chairman of the Party in Saigon was talking up private sector activity -- he sounded like the mayor of a big mid-western city. It was like a chamber of commerce speech. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: That’s good. (U)
The President: On the other side, the General Secretary said first we have to get what happened in the war straight. He said I’m glad you were against it. Your visit has helped us a lot. Our Ambassador, Pete Peterson, was in the Hanoi Hilton for six years. I said we were debating the nature of the conflict, but let’s get one thing straight: we were not friends. Now that you have a united country, we are still having the same debate about how much of these things are eternal questions and how you have to join the debate.

Prime Minister Blair: It looks fascinating -- but what have you returned to?

The President: Between you and me, here’s the problem. We always knew this could happen where someone could win the popular vote but lose the electoral college. You have electoral votes that correspond to representation in the House and then you get two more for your Senators, so it gives more influence to smaller states. The other argument in the old days was that we didn’t have the telegraph, so we needed honest people to come and say how the people voted and now that is obviously unnecessary. This happened only twice before where nobody could get a majority. In 1876 and 1888 we had a case where the winner of the popular vote lost the electoral college. In both times, the results were clouded and controversial, but largely the South was still solidly democratic. It was against the people who won the Civil War so you had fluky results. This is just a case where it just happened that 40,000 votes out of 200 million people is what the dispute in Florida is about. Gore has said he will not challenge the electoral college, but he wants to make sure that if Bush is given Florida that the people who showed up got their vote counted. The truth is, Tony, everybody knows Florida had complicated procedures. They used a ballot a lot of older people couldn’t read, and more people intended to vote for Gore than Bush. You still have ten thousands blacks in one precinct. They were going to vote for Gore. Ten thousand uncounted votes in one county and six thousand in another. You have nineteen thousand predominately blacks in Palm Beach County who punched Buchanan and then punched Gore. That is another sixteen thousand votes for Gore. Then you had thirty two hundred Jewish people who voted for Buchanan and we had a statistician say it was a trillion to one shot that Buchanan could have gotten that many votes. The real question is: can Gore re-enfranchise enough people to win the elections instead of the Republicans? The Secretary of State was Bush’s campaign chairman and now the Republican House is threatening to make him.
President if the electoral votes go to Gore or not. The Florida constitution says if you can divine the intention of the voter, the vote should be counted and ironically, everything Bush is fighting in Florida in the recount is precisely what the law he signed in Texas requires. Any indentation at all these voters make is supposed to count.

Prime Minister Blair: So what's your bet?

The President: I don't know. On the merits, Gore should win, if we can re-enfranchise enough voters, but even the Florida Supreme Court, they issued a great decision for Gore but Miami Dade said "we can't finish by Sunday, so we are not going to do it at all." So now they have to decide whether they can get their own order by delaying. They don't need to have any of this done until December 12th, but you know the Florida Legislature is Republican. The Republican Congress is threatening to change the law and they would throw it into the House. But if they do that, he will be destroyed and he never will recover.

Prime Minister Blair: What is your opinion?

The President: Right now it's evenly divided because the process is confusing but generally thought to be fair. The Republicans are great spin meisters. They just say it differently. It is a power grab. Now we probably will not get the ones reenfranchised who double voted on that illegal ballot, but the truth is, if these people were running for State Legislature, under the law, those courts would get those votes to Gore. They just don't have the courage to do it in a presidential election. You have heard only a slightly biased opinion. If I thought Bush won fair and square, I would tell Al to pack it in, but Gore has on the merits of those who voted, the stronger claim. So Bush is just trying to run out the clock. That's why they are desperate to shut it down because they know Gore lost a lot more votes in those that were thrown out. I don't know what is going to happen.

Prime Minister Blair: Really amazing.

The President: I think we will work it out and be all right. It is very important to remember that the whole right wing in America desperately wants this and they still control the Congress. There are other things we can talk about when I see you because Gore came back 4-5 percent last week and he started running his campaign on continuing the progress of the last eight years and it was obvious to me in the last 48 hours, I told one of our people, he might win the popular vote and lose the electoral college. I don't think there is any question that if everybody in Florida had their vote counted as intended, Gore would have won by thirty thousand votes.

Prime Minister Blair: The right wing press here has just been desperate for Bush.

The President: They are all upset that the military people got disenfranchised because they came out in force for Governor Bush so he carried them 2 to 1. But World War II veterans and holocaust survivors, they were perfectly fine with having them disenfranchised.

Prime Minister Blair: They are a lot more ruthless than our folks aren't they?

The President: They are. They hate us more than we hate them. It's all about power to them. They don't care as much about government, they just want the power. I will tell you more when I see you. I have not said publicly what I just told you. I have to be President here. The New York Times finally went after the Republicans today. They said they are just over reaching. I wouldn't even be surprised to see the U.S. Supreme Court try to overturn the Florida Supreme Court.

Prime Minister Blair: Blimey.

The President: So here we are.

Prime Minister Blair: As I say, I can't wait to see you. We are going to have a good talk about it.

The President: Yes. Let's talk about that. Did our people tell you we might be able to come over on the 12th and maybe go to Belfast and Dublin on the 13th and 14th?

Prime Minister Blair: Any time.

The President: Is that soon enough?

Prime Minister Blair: I've got to go to Zagreb tonight to this European Balkans thing.

The President: I'm really glad you are going.
Prime Minister Blair: I will go there with Bertie Ahern and we will talk on the plane about the outlines of an agreement. Jim Steinberg will fill you in.

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: Yes. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: I am going to go through with Bertie tonight what are the three more difficult issues:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d) What we aim to have by the middle of next week is a package we agree on. The right package to go with. But I would have thought the 12th-14th is about the right time. (E)

The President: Okay, I will set it up. I can do whatever in England. I am coming there basically for you, so I will do whatever helps you the most. I can come to Chequers or maybe give a speech at Oxford. I thought about talking about five or six major issues the whole world will face together over the next ten years. Something that would keep the Third Way thing going, but I don't have to give a speech at all. I am interested in helping you. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: That is very good of you, Bill. I think a speech on that theme would be very useful. Why don't I give some thought to where it should be. We got an inkling, and it's fine with us, that you preferred outside of London. (C)

The President: No. I just thought that if we went to London, you would have to do a big dinner or something. I wanted to help you politically and push our agenda. If it helps you, I am happy to do that. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: That is really kind of you. I will work on that basis. (E)

The President: If you think it is better, I will go to Oxford. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: That is great. I will think that through. (C)
The President: The only caveat might be if we have timing problems because the 12th is the day all the electors are supposed to be certified and there might be some reason I have to wait until the next morning to come. But I went to Brunei and Vietnam and the best I can do is show the country that everything is just chugging along. If in the next week something goes haywire, I will call you.

Prime Minister Blair: I certainly think a speech is good and my instinct is to stay outside of London. We can get some private time as well. That is my instinct. But why don't I go through it with my folks and we will come back to you with clear suggestions.

The President: Okay.

Prime Minister Blair: So you will be here on the 12th through the 14th?

The President: Yes. My thought is the 12th with you and to go to Belfast on the 13th. Maybe Dublin too, or on the 14th -- might have to allow two days in Belfast. If there is actually some sort of deal cooked that you need me to bless, we might be able to allocate a whole day to be there to work this. I am going to allow for that, but I think I just have to wait and see.

Prime Minister Blair: I will be in a better position once I speak to Bertie tonight and take the temperature of the people over the weekend. I don't want to land you in something where you only have a half day.

The President: I won't do that. That's why I left a day open.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay.

The President: Can we talk about the Hague and climate change?

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely.

The President: You know, first of all, thank you for helping moderate the EU position so that we can all have agreement. I think you and Dutch are key for an agreement. The French and the Germans aren't there yet. I have to tell you where the politics are going to be in the United States. We have Congress evenly divided. We have Republicans acknowledging, even Bush, that this is a real problem. Something has to be done. We now have through this partnership with Detroit on the next generation of vehicles that Al Gore spearheaded, we got these cars that will get 80 mpg. We are trying hard. The last step is chemical research, which would help everybody and make your oil money good for 30 years. Bio-mass fuels can help us get something like seven or even eight times more efficient gas or oil than we have today. That is about a third of the problem with transportation. We are also trying to get this massive progress to rapidly accelerate the construction industry. We have another plan for dealing with our utilities and heavy manufacturing which is the last third. Finally, after being treated like I was trying to wreck the economy, we are finally getting broad acknowledgement. If we get what we need on the sinks, forests and all our potential, the gain is something like 300 million tons. We are prepared to go down to less than a third of that, but we need to get something. We will be flexible, but we need to get something. I think we are down to 125. I think it is a mistake to put limits on emission trading because that is a real killer for us politically. I think it would be seen for what it is, that Europe wants to try to make America adopt its tax structure and reduce our emissions in the least efficient way. It would give us less incentive. So the problem may get worse as we get better. I think it is bad policy. Even Bush acknowledges it. Right now, about two House seats left to be decided. The Senate is 50-50 if Bush wins but 51-49 if Al wins because Lieberman would leave his Senate seat and the Governor of Connecticut is a Republican and would appoint a Republican. There are enough Democrats from energy producing areas that if this looks like we are getting a bad deal, that will hurt us. It also sends the wrong message to developing countries. What matters is not the results, but how we achieve it. I think it is important to get an agreement. If we get no agreement, we just give the reactionaries an excuse to walk away. (\)

Prime Minister Blair: Here’s my take. I just spoke with John Prescott, who is heading our delegation over there, on the sinks issue.

I think there is probably something you can do there. (\)

The President: Absolutely. We are prepared to take the overall number lower than the science indicates. I think the other thing is you want to have some encouragement in this document for sinks. We also need to do something about the rain forests - an approach that is totally voluntary. (\)
Prime Minister Blair: No. Our proposal is to tax itself. We said, "Let's establish a fund." I don't think any other countries have done this as much as we have. We have done it in two contexts in America with pollutants. We had quicker compliance with clean air efforts at lower costs than the people projected. Every time we did it, it worked faster and cheaper. I understand why some Europeans want to limit trading in any way, but it is a big mistake. Developing countries are important. They don't have much of a problem, but you have to give them the incentive to take action. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: I am totally in agreement with you.
The President: Yes. I will push our proposal on a fund more and make it attractive to the G-77 and you want us to buck up Aznar and Guterres. (c)

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. And Schroeder. (E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d))

The President: We ought to be more for a market solution here. (C)

Prime Minister Blair: Exactly. (E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d))

The President: The regulation should be the outcome, but how to get there should be left to the most efficient means. Let me ask something else. How did your visit with Putin go? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: It was fine. Very interesting. He feels that he is not understood about the problems he is facing there. He was very anxious to impress me. He wanted to see America as a partner, I think. (E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d))

The President: I think he does, depending on who wins our elections, it might take a while to get it going, but the more time you can spend with him the better. I think he is a guy with a lot of ability and ambitions for the Russians. His intentions are generally honorable and straightforward, but he just hasn't made up his mind yet. He could get squishy on democracy. (E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d))

Prime Minister Blair: (E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d))

The President: Politically, he has got to be with the Arabs on the Middle East dispute, but I told him one real problem you have here is that it is not clear how much can be controlled in this situation. Violence begets violence.

If you are the stronger person, that is what you have to do. It was like (gap) but I think especially for the next year, whoever is President here, and until we get organized, the more time you spend with him, the more it will pay off.

Prime Minister Blair: Yes. I will carry on with it. I think the other thing is he is only now choosing the people around him. That really matters in terms of what is being pumped into his ears. He is highly intelligent.

The President: Yes. A lot of people pour crap in. He wants to do a good job and he works at it every day. He is intelligent and disciplined. The last thing. I know you had a meeting with Barak, and I know you’re worried. I am doing my best. We’ve made little headway today.

I am doing my best but you see what the problem is, don’t you?

Prime Minister Blair: Absolutely.

The President: Did you tell him that?

Prime Minister Blair: Yes, I have. I will follow it up and speak to him.
The President: It is interesting. The Israelis have good substantive policies, but the level of misunderstanding between the two sides is pretty high.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: I agree with that.

Prime Minister Blair: We will try.

The President: Yes. We're trying to take another run at him on that and maybe we'll get some movement today. I am really glad you are going to this Balkans conference. Tell all those Balkan guys I said hello. I am thrilled about what you are doing. I think America will do its part out there, no matter what you're hearing out of the Bush campaign.

Prime Minister Blair: Ridiculous isn't it. Happy Thanksgiving, Bill.

The President: Thank you so much.

Prime Minister Blair: How is the Senator?

The President: Happy as a clam. Chelsea asked about Leo.

Prime Minister Blair: He is absolutely great and you will see when you come over.

The President: I know Chelsea is coming. Hillary wants to but she still has to sort out some scheduling things. I hope we see you on the 12th.

Prime Minister Blair: Okay.
The President: Good-bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --
MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

SUBJECT: Telcon with British Prime Minister Blair (U)

PARTICIPANTS: The President
Prime Minister Blair

Notetakers: Michael Manning and Clark Lystra

DATE, TIME AND PLACE: December 13, 2000, 4:30-4:41 a.m. EST
Belfast, Ireland

The President: Hello? (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Hello? Hi, Bill, how are you doing? (U)

The President: Good. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: Did you get some rest? (U)

The President: Yes, a little. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It was amazing coverage of your visit yesterday. It was unbelievable. In Northern Ireland, it looks good. Did you speak to Adams and Seamus this morning? (C)

The President: No. Our people have been talking. (gap) I know what they are going to say to you. (gap)

Prime Minister Blair: What's that? (U)

The President: That the Sinn Fein view is that before the election campaigns in the UK, there ought to be a deal on demilitarization and decommissioning. They want to delay on Patten and can't embrace it right now. They will not cooperate directly on the Real IRA. We need to talk to them on the input they would do. There need to be more arrests in Omagh. Anyway, all they said was that they couldn't do more. Seamus Mallon is in a particular situation, you know, and the problem is that he says he will not agree yet on a police force. He may agree on one if arrests are made or something and if we find out more we will tell you, but I think you have to flush them out. I will

CONFIDENTIAL
Reason: 1.5(d)
Declassify on: 12/26/10
work today in our meeting with him. I’ll try to find out more about whatever the sequence is.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: That might cut the mustard with them.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: OK.

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: There may be something there.
Prime Minister Blair:

E.O. 13526, section 1.4(b)(d)

The President: That's why I think that if I were you, I would do a specific trade-off and if you could make some progress there, it would be alright (gap). I have to go and get to my meetings now. We'll be in touch. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: We need to decide on how specific we should be when we meet later. (Q)

The President: OK. Good-bye. (E)

Prime Minister Blair: Good-bye. (U)

-- End of Conversation --