Honorable William Jefferson Clinton
The White House
Washington, D. C.

Dear President Clinton:

During the campaign I was heartened to hear you speak out on the 25 year long conflict in the north of Ireland. The sad tale of troubles there is played out year in and year out. The International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and the labor movement have for years supported such programs as the application of the MacBride Principles in an effort to bring about domestic tranquility, justice, reconciliation, and unity in Ireland.

Your proposal to appoint a special Peace Envoy to Northern Ireland is particularly appropriate at this time, since the governments are again attempting to reconcile their differences. The United States can play an important role in this effort. The appointment of a special Envoy, as you suggested, is the avenue through which the United States may exert pressure to bring about a settlement.

As you know, a group of Irish Americans who supported you during your campaign have gotten together a group of proposals which include reviewing the current practice of extraditing Irish people who seek political asylum, a program of continuing visa opportunities for Irish citizens, focusing attention on human rights abuses in the north of Ireland, and finally, increasing investments guided by the MacBride Principles to insure that economic opportunities are created throughout Ireland. This program amounts to a comprehensive approach to the international questions involving Ireland and those concerns of we of Irish American descent who wish to see the problems of Irish citizens addressed.

Thank you in advance for considering my opinions. I recognize that you have been under considerable pressure by the British government not to follow through on your promises. Let me assure you that the Irish American community looks forward with hope that finally an American government, under your leadership, will act in such a way to bring about peace and reconciliation in that most troubled nation.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,
